Taxman Wants His Share In Cash-for-Fish Caper

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The federal taxman plans to zero in on the multi-million dollar cash-for-fish caper underway in the herring roe fishing industry on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

In the fierce buying war some processors are carrying as much as half a million dollars in cash to pay for the catches on the fishing grounds.

Betty Newton, a spokesman for the tax department in Victoria said today there is growing concern over the records — or the lack thereof — fishermen keep on their transactions.

"Most fishermen keep some records but they are not as detailed as we would like," she said.

"Often there is no way the records show an explicit identification for each catch and transaction."

She said federal tax auditors are looking into the problem but she wouldn't elaborate.

"Supposedly when a person is handling so much cash he should carry a receipt book . . . if only for his own protection," she said.

However, cash transactions are commonplace in the industry and are often completed without the exchange of receipts.

Stuart Shelley, vice president of production for B.C. Packers said some large vessels are forced to carry $300,000 to $500,000 cash on board.

Even a smaller, 50-ton packer normally has to carry about $150,000 to purchase the roe which has soared in price this year to as much as $3,500 a ton, he said.

The amount of cash floating about has posed a security problem but there have been no incidents to date.

Textiles Gouging Charged

OTTAWA (CP) — Clothing makers say textile factories are taking advantage of import quotas and the lower value of the Canadian dollar to jack up prices that will have to be passed on to consumers.

The country's 2,300 clothing manufacturers already are forced to pay higher prices for the fabric and yarn they import from abroad because of the lower value of the dollar.

But they say Canadian textile factories, which supply about half their needs, have reacted to higher foreign prices by raising their own prices at home.

The price of polyester-cotton yarn from Japan, for example, has risen from 72 cents a yard in the fall of 1977 to $1.30 a yard because of the decline of the dollar relative to the Japanese yen.

The price of the same Canadian-made fabric has gone from 72 cents to $1.20 in the same period.

Peter Clark, executive-director of the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute, says there are also complaints that textile factories have raised prices to clothing makers after orders have been placed.

To add to the price increase problem Finance Minister Jean Chretien lessened the competition from abroad even more by quietly imposing new textile import quotas Jan. 1 that will restrict imports from low-cost countries in the Far East.

"They were introduced as a result of pressure from the textile industry," said Clark.

There were no public hearings on the quotas as there were on extensive import quotas for clothing imposed in 1976.

The textile and clothing quotas — known as "voluntary export restraints" — were negotiated with low-cost countries such as Taiwan, South Korea and China because of complaints from domestic manufacturers they were being hurt by imports.

But Clark says it is the textile manufacturers themselves who have been im-

Secret Data Second Hand

OTTAWA (CP) — Confidential Statistics Canada documents were discovered by a defence department employee in a filing cabinet he purchased from a used furniture store, according to the Ottawa Journal.

Twelve file folders, stamped confidential, contained the results of a 1973 national survey on the production of a wide range of manufactured goods — everything from airplane parts to pharmaceuticals, the newspaper says.

It is the second time in two months that secret Statistics Canada documents have been discovered in somewhat less than secret circumstances.

Progressive Conservative MP Elmer MacKay said last month that thousands of confidential forms, including income tax returns, were lying unattended in cardboard boxes in the basement storeroom of a government building. Any one could have walked off the street and read the tax forms, the MP said.

In the latest incident, the defence department employee gave the documents to The Journal because he was "upset and concerned" about a lack of security, the newspaper says.

Individual companies are not identified in the material described as work sheets by Guy Leclerc, assistant chief statistician.

"There may have been a little bit of neglect" in disposal of the material, which "should have gone to the shredder," Leclerc said.

Peace Pact Signed Next Week: Egypt

Times News Services

The Israeli cabinet today approved without dissent U.S. President Jimmy Carter's compromise proposals for a Middle East peace treaty, and Egypt's prime minister exultantly predicted the historic pact could be signed in Washington next week.

The cabinet voted 15-0 for the proposals with one abstention and one absence, cabinet sources said.

Education Minister Zvulun Hammer abstained from the voting and Transport Minister Haim Landau was absent. Both are hardliners who have opposed the treaty provisions and favor widespread Jewish settlement in the occupied Arab territories.

Another cabinet meeting will be held Sunday for appoval of the treaty document as a whole, but that was viewed as only a formality.

"The American proposals are possible to live with. Otherwise the government would not have accepted them," Minister-Without-Portfolio Moshe Nissim said.

Begin told reporters after today's meeting that he telephoned Carter and informed him of his ministers' decision.

"I informed him that the last 'two' outstanding issues were resolved today by a positive decision of the cabinet," he said. "The president was very glad to receive this information."

Begin, 65, then excused himself and said he had to go home "to have some rest."

In Washington Carter said he was "extremely pleased" with the cabinet decision.

"This means that all of the outstanding issues ... have now been successfully resolved."

Carter had returned to Washington in triumph early today after his Middle East peace mission, and said, "I believe that God has answered out prayers."

EDMONTON (CP) — Cloudy skies changed to clear today for Alberta's general election as Premier Peter Lougheed awaited the outcome of a vote expected to renew his rule.

Police Recover $3M Emerald

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police have recovered a $3 million emerald stolen in August, 1977, from a gem museum in Idar-Oberstein, West Germany.

Inspector Keith Dane of the RCMP commercial crime squad said a Vancouver-based gang of international jewel thieves turned over the 59-carat emerald late Monday through an intermediary.

Dane said an international network of police forces traced the thieves here but were unable to obtain enough evidence to lay charges.

"Eventually, direct approaches were made to a number of known criminals and after lengthy discussions to intermediaries the gem was turned back to police."

Dane said the gang comprises at least five criminals who have served time in British Columbia for theft offences.

Dane said he suspected the thieves turned over the emerald because they were unable to sell it.

Unemployed Man, 47 Firebombing Suspect

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 47-year-old unemployed man was in police custody today after he was arrested near the scene of the city's 22nd firebombing. But police refused to say if it is a breakthrough in the frustrating case.

Police, aided by two citizen's band operators, arrested a man shortly after a Molotov cocktail was thrown through the window of a downtown Canada Manpower office at 3:20 a.m.

Mirroring previous incidents, a brick was used to break the window. The arrested man was walking near the office .

Police have not yet charged the man — a resident of the city's east end — but said charges probably will be laid later today.

To date, 10 financial institutions, six government offices and six other buildings have been hit by firebombs.

Two men were arrested and charged recently for allegedly taking part in one bombing but the attacks continued.

The two men who stopped the man today were members of the Vancouver Community Alert Patrol who were involved in stakeouts of premises which were potential targets of attacks.

Earlier today, the door of the Akali Singh Sikh temple in east-end Vancouver was damaged by fire shortly after 1 a.m. but police are treating that as an arson.

Jet Crashes In Peking

TOKYO AP) — A British-built Trident aircraft crashed in the western outskirts of Peking and 200 persons were believed to have been killed, Japan's Kyodo News Service reported today from the Chinese capital.

Kyodo quoted witnesses as saying that the aircraft crashed into a factory near an airport shortly after take off.

No information was available as to how many of the victims were aboard the plane or whether some of the dead might have been on the ground or in the factory.

Kyodo attributed its report to Western reporters, who, it said, happened to be in the area of the crash.

The Tridents are used by CAAC, the Civial Aviation Administration of China, which serves as China's national and international airline.

The British-built plane is able to carry between 115 and 180 passengers depending upon its design, according to the 1979 edition of Jane's All the World's Aircraft.

Meanwhile, in Qatar, a Jordanian jetliner crashed while trying to land at Doha during a rainstorm early today, killing 45 of the 64 persons on board, officials said.

The Qatar government news agency said the 49 passengers included several Europeans and Americans, but airport sources said two Britons were the only non-Arabs among the 19 survivors.

One of the survivors, a woman, was reported in serious condition

Nineteen Quakes Hit Mexico

Times News Services

MEXICO CITY — A major pre-dawn earthquake and 18 aftershocks jolted vast areas of Mexico today killing one person and destroying buildings in the capital.

The Red Cross said 32 Mexicans were injured in the quake that was felt from near the U.S. border to the southern mountains.

The Seismological Institute in Mexico City registered the tremor at 7.0 on the open-ended Richter scale and put the epicenter 315 kilometres southwest of the capital city, near the Pacific resort of Acapulco. Aftershocks registering as high as 5 on the scale continued for four hours.

The National Earthquake Centre in Golden, Colo., measured the quake at 7.9. That reading would make the quake the world's strongest this year.

Power to two-thirds of the capital city of 13 million was cut for up to four hours. The subway system, which has its own power grid, was stopped for about 15 minutes. The quake hit at 5:08 a.m.

The Red Cross said 21 of the injured were in Mexico City, one was in Chipancingo, inland from Acapulco, and 10 were in the coastal resort town of Zihuatanejo, about 40 km from the epicentre. The fatality, a 11-year-old girl, was hit by debris from a building in the capital.

At the Ibero-American University in southern Mexico City a three- storey administrative and classroom building collapsed.

A bank building on Juarez Street in the heart of the city was badly damaged. Several floors of the building appeared to have collapsed.

Many windows shattered and streets and sidewalks were covered with large shards of glass.

About one hour after the main shock, a secondary tremor rumbled through the city, swaying buildings and sending tourists pouring back into the streets from their hotels.

Two hours before the first Mexican quake, a minor tremblor measuring about 3.8 on the Richter scale hit the Anchorage area.

BCSC Report Dubbed Sour Grapes

The president of the B.C. Systems Corp. (BCSC) said today a secret report critical of his corporation is a sour grapes reaction from senior officials in government ministries who lost their pet data processing departments.

The report was revealed Tuesday by Vancouver-Burrard NDP MLA Norm Levi.

Don Alexander said when the corporation was set up last year to centralize all the government's data processing, it absorbed 250 employees, including top computer experts, from other ministries.

He said some department heads resented the loss of their own systems and key personnel.

But Levi said the report written by top-level civil servants from six ministries proves the corporation should be disbanded.

The report condemns the corporation, saying it is slower and less efficient than the individual data processing systems it replaced.

Alexander said the complaints raised in the report are not valid.

"I resent very much being called the president of B.C. Chaos Corp." — the title given by Levi to the corporation.

Levi said things were bad enough when the government suddenly dumped the B.C. resources corporation five-free share giveaway on the corporation.

The NDP MLA said because the share deal has top priority, other computer work requested by government departments has been shunted aside, causing even further delays in normal data processing.

Alexander said Levi was talking nonsense when he suggested the budget for BCSC will top $44 million this year, about $11 million over budget and double the $22 million computer services cost when spread throughout the various ministries.

At the third-quarter mark of the current fiscal year, operating expenses had reached $16 million, Alexander said.

He said it is projected it will reach $26 million by March 31, the end of the fiscal year.

Alexander also said the suggestion that the health and finance ministries were experiencing such severe data processing problems with BCSC it was affecting their ability to deliver services was also untrue.

When BCSC looked into that area, it found an improvement which was not perceived by senior management in the ministries.

The justice information system was never abandoned, as claimed by Levi, and is still being worked on.

Alexander said with the shift to BCSC, expertise was not lost, and is in fact being increased.

Data processing budgets in some ministries have not doubled and tripled as the report suggests. The ministries simply weren't counting indirect costs before, but now are being billed for those costs by BCSC.

Alexander claimed the recommendations made in the report are invalid because they've always been in effect.

Alexander said if Levi would take the time to visit BCSC headquarters he would find an efficient organization.

Canadian $ Highest This Year

Times News Services

TORONTO — Money traders say they are puzzled by a steady buying of Canadian currency on international exchanges which has pushed the Canadian dollar to its highest level this year.

In noon trading at New York today, the Canadian dollar was down 4/25 at 85.34 U.S. cents. But the downward movement reflected the U.S. dollar's sudden strength rather than Canadian weakness.

The U.S. currency shot up to its highest level since last June against the Japanese yen early today, and opened marginally higher on most major European exchanges.

At the end of trading Tuesday, the Canadian dollar changed hands at 85.48 U.S. cents, after strengthening nearly one-fifth cent from Tuesday's opening value. On Monday it closed at 85.17.

The Canadian dollar, while losing a bit of ground to the U.S. dollar, continued to move upwards against the German mark, the yen and the British pound.

This week's trading levels — the dollar strengthened more than one U.S. cent since the middle of last week — were the highest since Dec. 1, when the dollar traded at 85.57, and was also the first time since December the dollar has traded above 85 U.S. cents.

Historically, rapid increases or drops in the Canadian dollar's value have been due to speculation or intervention by the Bank of Canada.

Juvenile Escapers Captured

Three juvenile boys who broke out of the Victoria Juvenile Detention Home Tuesday night were picked up early today in a stolen truck.

The three, aged 11 to 16, smashed a window in the arts and crafts room at the home at about 7:30 p.m. and escaped through the opening.

Three hours later Richard Fowler of 161 Estellene reported to police his pickup truck had been stolen from 934 Selkirk in Esquimalt.

A Sooke RCMP officer spotted the truck on the Sooke River Road near the Potholes at 2:45 a.m. and apprehended the trio without incident.

Grenada Rebels Braced

Times News Services

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada — A ragtag leftist rebel army organized its defences today for an expected counter-attack by Eric Gairy, the UFO buff they ousted as prime minister of this Caribbean spice island.

The flamboyant Gairy, 57, who was in New York when the rebels struck before dawn Tuesday, said, "I have not been overthrown" and appealed to Washington, London and Ottawa for military help to battle the rebels.

None of the three governments has yet responded to his request.

Gairy, who says his authoritarian rule of Grenada was an assignment from God, said "I'm still in contact with my government. They are there and we are planning strategy."

The coup was staged because United States intelligence agents were on the island seeking militants to whom illegal sub-machine-guns had been shipped by Grenadians in the United States, he claimed.

A charismatic man often referred to as "The Boss" and "uncle" by his supporters, mostly peasants, Gairy was elected prime mister in 1976 in Grenada's first elections since its independence in 1974. The former trade union leader had served since 1961 as chief minister under British rule and had been fired twice for misappropriating public funds.

Witnesses said a policeman and a civilian were killed in the half-hour uprising, the first violent ouster of an elected government among former British colonies in the Caribbean.

The army barracks were burned to the ground and Radio Grenada, renamed Radio Free Grenada, appealed for doctors to aid the injured. But the streets of St. George's were quiet only hours after the coup and there were few signs of revolt.

Stores opened for business as usual today and the cable office reopened and began limited transmissions. Telephone communications, however, remained blocked. The airport has been closed since the coup.

Rebel leader Maurice Bishop, 36, said Gairy's ministers had been captured in their beds.

Bishop the son of a political opponent of Gairy's who was killed mysteriously five years ago, went on the radio to proclaim himself prime minister and urge citizens to assemble in central points to back the revolution.

Deputy prime minister Herbert Prudhomme, alos went on radio to appeal for an end to all resistance.

Israeli Traded For 76 Arabs

Times News Services

GENEVA — An Israeli soldier was traded for 76 Palestinians today in the first prisoner exchange between the Jewish state and Palestinian guerrillas.

Avraham Amram, captured 11 months ago during Israel's invasion of southern Lebanon, was swapped for 60 Palestinian men and six women at the Geneva airport. At the same time, 10 other Palestinians were released by authorities in Israeli-occupied territories, but no details were given about their release.

The exchange announcement was made by the International Committee of the Red Cross.

It said Amram arrived from Damascus on a Bulgarian Airways plane, that the Palestinians arrived from Israel on a chartered plane five minutes later and parked at opposite ends of the airport.

Half the Palestinians were released, put on a large airport bus and driven toward the Bulgarian plane, stopping some distance away.

Then Amram was released from the Bulgarian plane, put on a smaller bus and driven toward the Israeli plane. The remaining Palestinians were then released.

Amram, a 33-year-old army reservist, will go to Tel Aviv in the Israeli aircraft as soon as formalities have been completed, and the Palestinians will be taken to Tripoli

"The exchange was deliberately timed to coincide with (President) Carter's visit to the Middle East to prove that nobody can step on the Palestinian rights," Fadel Shrourou of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine told a news conference in Damascus Tuesday.

Once a Tory Always One?

Humming on the Tory hot-line in Ottawa is the word that CJOR talk-show host John Reynolds who called it quits as an MP in 1977 after complaining of low parliamentary salaries, is ready to take another pay cut and toss his hat into the ring in the coming general election. Should he decide to re-enter politics, Reynolds is expected to seek nomination in Vancouver Centre. Economist Pat Carney, nominated a year ago in the riding, withdrew earlier this month, citing uncertainty over the date of the election. The seat was last held by former justice minister Ron Basford. He has left politics, and Liberals have nominated former Vancouver mayor Art Phillips to replace him.

Nobody, but nobody, asks a member of the Royal family to pose for pictures. Well, almost nobody. Norma Bennett did Tuesday — and to the surprise of press photographers following Prince Charles in Perth, Australia, he co-operated. It happened when the heir to the Throne spotted two little girls — Mrs. Bennett's daughters — and stopped to talk to them. Whipping out her camera, Mrs. Bennett ordered the prince to "hold still." He did and she snapped away. Royal protocol says nobody, but nobody ... And nobody in the press corps ever has.

Singer Olivia Newton-John says when she first heard she was to receive the Order of the British Empire, she thought it was a practical joke. "I had to check it up with my office people before I believed it," she said Tuesday after receiving the award at Buckingham Palace from the Queen. The star of the movie Grease was honored for her services to Australian music. "I really appreciate the incredible honor of getting the OBE at the age of 30," she said. Also receiving the OBE was Gordon Jackson, who played the butler Hudson in Upstairs, Downstairs.

Sophia

If New York Mayor Ed Koch went home from work with lipstick on his collar, blame it on Sophia Loren. Miss Loren went to city hall to promote her new book Tuesday and the event turned into a kissing bee. She kissed Koch, he kissed her; she kissed other city officials and city hall aides. . . and they all smooched right back. After Koch had caught his breath, he exclaimed: "There's never been a more beautiful woman than Sophia to visit city hall. She's a beautiful woman with great charm."

Michael Prokes, a fanatic member of the Peoples Temple inner circle, killed himself Tuesday night at a news conference where he defended the cult's jungle death ritual and accused the U.S. government of persecuting the church. Prokes, 31, a former newsman, interrupted the news conference at a Modesto, Calif., motel, walked to a bathroom and shot himself in the head with a .38-calibre pistol. Police said he left a suicide note but declined to disclose its contents. "The people of Jonestown died ... because they weren't allowed to live in peace," he told assembled reporters before taking his life.

Activist-acress Jane Fonda for U.S. president? Why not, says author Gore Vidal — "She would make a damn good one." But Miss Fonda laughed off the nomination offer Tuesday in San Francisco. Says she, "I think there's a danger of confusing politics with Hollywood. I call it Pollywood. If that's what you want, then you can make statements like that." Still, with that fan club ...

Hotel magnate Conrad Hilton's daughter Constance Francesca Hilton says her father's guilt cut her out of his estate with a paltry $100,000 — and she's contesting his will in Los Angeles. Miss Hilton — whose mother is Zsa Zsa Gabor — says her father renounced her in 1971 because he was guilt-ridden about marrying her mother without dispensation of his first marriage from the Roman Catholic Church. Says she, "He was so tormented and so tortured by the fact he had fathered while unmarried in the eyes of his beloved church ... he could not live with that fact just as he could not live with mother." Hilton died Jan. 3 at the age of 91.

Industrial Street has been upgraded in Canonsburg, Pa. It's now Bobby Vinton Boulevard, named after one of the community's more famous native sons. City Council decided night to honor the Polish-American singer "for his contributions to the world of entertainment." But he isn't the first to claim home-town, street-sign honors. The town has sported a Perry Como Street for several years.

Finally, the luck of the Irish hit a second time for Frank McNulty who has spent the last four years in U.S. federal prison for refusing to pay taxes on his Irish Sweepstakes winnings. In San Francisco, Tuesday, Judge Alfonso Zirpoli ordered McNulty's release on Friday — the day before St. Patrick's Day. The judge said it is apparent keeping McNulty behind bars any longer will not coerce him into paying Uncle Sam. Wonder if he'll celebrate with a Shamrock shake?

Foreign debt piling up

A strange mutation of Canada's foreign investment problem has taken place in the last few years. Proportionately, foreign investment has been declining as a percentage of all investment in Canada. That's the good news.

The takeover of the Canadian economy by foreign interests — mainly American — has slowed to a crawl, according to the latest figures published by Statistics Canada.

From 1973 through 1977, the total of new direct foreign investment was just $1.4 billion. Over the five-year period, foreign investment averaged less than $300 million a year. Even Mel Hurtig of the rabidly nationalist Committee for an Independent Canada had to admit in a speech last weekend that this was "a very modest" amount. The figures are even more dramatic for the period 1976-78. In those three years foreign investment totalled just $25 million.

By another measurement, the information on corporate ownership required under the Corporations and Labor Unions Return Act shows that the percentage of business assets controlled outside the country has dropped. In 1971, foreigners owned 37 per cent, but by 1976 (the most recent year for which statistics are available), it had declined to 31 per cent.

However, Canadians have not suddenly begun buying back the country from the Americans. What the figures reflect is that expansion by foreign-owned companies in recent years has been financed by internally generated profits, and until 1978 profits unusually slim in most corporate sectors.

Foreign ownership in itself is probably an issue that will be of less and less importance as time goes on. But the bad news is that it has been replaced by a crisis with the potential to do much more damage to the nation and the Canadian economy — mounting foreign debt.

The massive amounts of capital which flowed into Canadian investments through the 1960s and early 1970s were used to buy up significant segments of Canadian industry and resources, but one benefit was that this capital inflow helped to even up Canada's balance of payments.

Foreign investment balanced the outflow of Canadian dollars used to pay for imports, travel, dividends and interest payments and Canadian investments abroad. But as foreign investment has tapered off virtually to nothing, Canadians have not moved in with their dollars. Instead, they have sent their money out of the country in increasing amounts. A graph of foreign investment in Canada in the latter part of the decade shows a steep drop. (Part of this outflow, no doubt, is due to Canadians ignoring the reassurances of Finance Minister Jean Chretien on there being no need for restrictions on the flow of Canadian money abroad. They anticipate a different story after the election.

Nearly as steep is the rising line describing Canadian investment abroad — from a total $1 billion in the years 1970-72 to $3.1 billion in the three-year period 1976-78.

The country is having to borrow large amounts on foreign money markets. The federal government has borrowed heavily in the last year to finance its own budgetary deficits and to keep the dollar from plunging too far against the American dollar and other foreign currencies.

As a result, interest payments are a larger and larger share of the balance of payments deficit, which totalled $5.3 billion last year, according to Statistics Canada. Interest paid on foreign loans amounted to $3.4 billion in 1978, almost twice the $1.9 billion paid out in 1976.

There have been some beneficial side-effects of the present economic situation. The fallen dollar helped produce a half billion dollar increase in merchandise trade, but the deficit on the service account — interest, travel etc. — rose twice as fast.

And the gap is going to continue widening unless our huge foreign debt can be brought under control. Foreign investment concerned many Canadians because they saw control of basic economic sectors slipping away to companies headquartered in other countries. But at least Canada received something in return — some jobs, development of resources which otherwise would not have been exploited.

With our mounting billions of foreign indebtedness, we are harnessed to a treadmill that turns only faster and faster.

JAMES RESTON

Jerry pumps out mysticism

NEW YORK — Every time Gov. Jerry Brown of California comes back east, he seems a little more rumpled, a little more talkative and serious, a lot more confident and ambitious. You can't discuss politics with him privately these days without concluding that this young man, now coming up on his 41st birthday, is not only challenging Jimmy Carter for the presidency, but calling for a political, technological and moral reappraisal of American life.

He is well-informed about all the mystifying contradictions of prices and wages — he rattles off the figures like a computer — but he insists that most of our problems are not mathematical but philosophical. He doesn't even stop to grapple with Carter's devilish dilemmas and questions at home and abroad because he thinks they are the wrong questions, leading to false dilemmas.

He talks as if he were the head of a sovereign government, which in a way he is. California has an annual gross product of over $200 billion, which puts it up among the top 10 business nations of the world. He negotiates trade deals with President Jose Lopez Portillo of Mexico and others on an equal basis, and discusses the problems of Washington as if it were a misguided foreign capital.

Outdated metaphors

The problem, he says, is that the assumptions, the metaphors and the habits of thinking that have shaped American life today have come out of the 1950s and 1960s and are inadequate to deal with the critical issues of the 1980s. We are wandering at present between a past that is gone, he insists, and a future we cannot yet see.

As he observes it, we need to change the political questions in America and have a wholly different debate about the future. We are not building for the future but stealing from the future, he says, and must shift from a society based on "consumption" to a society based on "development."

Ask him a simple question about the mood of the country, and he gives you a half-hour lecture. America has been living on deficit spending and on private borrowing, he says, but life is not a candy store and the due bills are coming in. His call for a constitutional convention to compel a balanced federal budget is only one means of changing the political dialogue, he insists, but there are others.

If there is a kind of malaise in the country now, he thinks it is because the exciting vistas of the future are not yet part of the national political debate.

He talks about the coming development of the United States, Canada and Mexico, which he describes as the richest area on earth with the greatest potential for the future. He discusses the industrialization of outer space as if it were easier to achieve than the rebuilding of the South Bronx — which, come to think of it, could be true.

The exploration of outer space will be to the 21st century, he observes, what the oceans were to the 19th. He talks with the uttermost seriousness: we are not at the end of the old terrestrial frontiers but at the beginning of a new era of exploration with satellites finding new sources of energy and new ways to develop the fertility of the earth.

JERRY BROWN
. . . gure of the golden west

This is not "Buck Rogers stuff," he insists. Before long, a rocket will take off from the east coast of the United States and land like an airplane a few minutes later in California. We have the technology for the coming age, he says, if we have the will and vision to develop it. But our productivity and our capital spending for the future are declining; our technological leadership of the world is in danger: in short, he says, we are not developing our human and technical resources or preserving the natural system of our land and water or protecting the atmosphere of our planet with the "reverence" it requires to sustain the human family.

It is very hard to interrupt this alluring vision of the coming age. The governor provides more questions than answers. One wonders what he would do about Iran and the counter-revolution of Islam against the materialism of the west; or about the contradictory demands of Prime Minister Begin and President Sadat; or about the reckless waste of energy in this country. But he is dreaming of a different world, with one important exception.

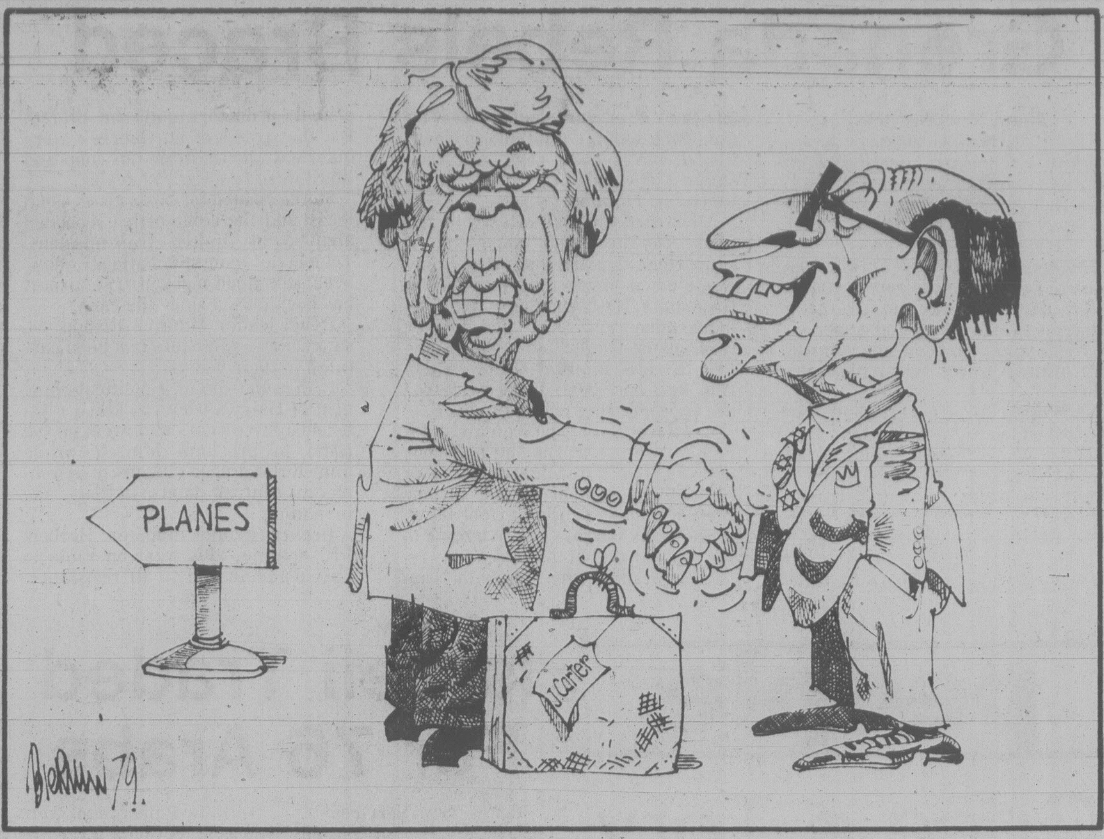
The governor of California didn't come to New York to talk philosophy, but to meet with the business leaders, the practical politicians, the labor bosses, the spokesmen of the Jewish community, and the leaders of the national black organizations, all of whom are disenchanted with Carter, and some of whom are now looking around for another Democratic presidential candidate for 1980.

Some new questions

I found him, for example, with Vernon Jordan at the headquarters of the Urban League in New York, and did manage to ask him when he would put all this philosophy on the line in a declared campaign for the presidency. He would decide that later, he said, but left no doubt that he was coming to the end of his political career in California and was ready to challenge Carter for the White House.

The guess here is that he may be too dreamy for the battle, but there is a certain logic to his adventure. He has a sense of history, if no sense of humor. But he also has a sense of the future, and that's what young men are for. He is probably right in trying to change the political dialogue, and he may even be right in believing that the American people are in what he calls an "expectant mood," tired of the arguments of the past — and looking for new frontiers.

Anyway, he is still the most interesting, if the most unpredictable, personality in American politics today, and win or lose, he will at least bring some new and arresting questions into the presidential campaign of 1986.



" . . . say hello to my many friends in the States . . . and I'm afraid goodbye to many of yours . . . "

Facts on pensions

You may not be aware of it yet but your advertising department has ruined the Times' reputation for accurate and objective reporting.

I refer to the Feb. 24 ad of the National Citizen's Coalition on public service pensions; an ad, by the way, which borders on hate literature.

The coalition would have your readers believe that federal public employees receive pensions in the $15,000 to $20,000 range. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The average pension paid in 1978 was a mere $4,251. By anybody's calculation, that is poverty level income. Yet the coalition would tell you that indexing is really not necessary.

But let us get a few things straight about the pension plan itself and look at a number of facts which the National Citizens' Coalition deliberately ignores or glosses over.

The public service pension account is divided into two funds: the main (basic pension) fund and the supplementary (indexing) fund. The government readily admits that the latter fund has run into difficulty; quite simply, indexing (inflation) outstripped the rate of contributions to the fund. The solution, which is now before Parliament, is to use the retired employees' portion of the main fund to cover the deficit.

It is mainly because of the high rate of contributions made by public employees that the main fund is in good shape and can absorb the indexing fund's inadequacy. The proposal is really very simple. That is, since about thirty per cent of the money in the main fund was generated by the contributions of those now receiving pensions, the government proposes to use the excess interest earned on that amount as revenue to finance indexing. Or, to put it another way, the public service pensions will be financing the indexing of their pensions. It is a sound and reasonable proposition.

Federal public employees contribute a large percentage of their salary to the two funds. As of March 31, 1977, employee contributions plus interest since the introduction of a pension plan in 1924 amount to almost $5.9 billion. As of the same date only a little more than $2.6 billion has been paid in pension benefits over the same 53-year period, including full indexing payments.

And let us not forget that the main fund helps finance government operations; that is, the government borrows from the fund to meet the cost of government services.

The single weakness of the Coalition's campaign is that it does not address the question of the absolute need of Canadians today for a pension which will maintain its purchasing power during retirement years.

If your readers "should be mad as hell" as the ad exhorts, their anger should be directed towards our govenments for not addressing this immediate and pressing problem. They should be mad as hell at the Coalition for trying to discredit a pension plan which is a model for all employers to follow. — A. I. Stewart, President, Public Service Alliance of Canada.

An embarrassment

Re: He Crushed Me, says Margaret. (Times, March 7):

What a supreme embarrassment to Canadians to have poor lost little Maggie continue to make press around the world. I dearly wish that her "liberation" and "wild feelings of freedom" would move her to self-discovery without the association of her estranged husband, our prime minister.

If Maggie-baby truly wants to know if men want to go out with her because she's herself or because she's Margaret Trudeau, why doesn't she permanently resume her maiden name and then see how she makes out in the jet set. Maggie who? — Lee Jones, c/o 880 St. Patrick Street.

The artist's spirit fills Emily Carr house, reader says.

Emily Carr lives!

The spirit of Emily Carr lives on. I know, I have first-hand evidence. Go ahead and scoff, but I have proof. While exhibiting my art at the Emily Carr arts centre (the house her father built), I experienced her presence as truly as the light of day.

Now, I don't mean to say that I saw a ghost or spectre. I don't belive in such things, but when I saw the children from art classes playing on the sunlit lawn, when I passed a cheery "good day" with the jovial president of the Emily Carr Society who remarked on the well-fed cats living around the house, and when I remarked to myself what a unique opportunity the Emily Carr Arts Centre affords young, aspiring artists like myself . . . indeed when I noted the excellent job that the society is doing in keeping alive the cultural heritage which local artists owe to Emily Carr, I realized that the things Ms. Carr lived for, and the truths that she expressed in her life are alive and enshrined in that big house at 207 Government Street.

To put it another way, the spirit of Emily Carr lives on. — Jim Prendergast, 2560 Graham Street.

'Era of repression'

The March 8 letter of Mr. Ian Cass concerning the recent education conference at UVic seems to call for some comment. We certainly do get a lot of right-wing propaganda from Mr. Cass. Educational conferences are intended to generate ideas and discussion and, judging from the flap in the media, Laurier LaPierre and Dr. Pearl seem to have done just that.

It seems to me that it is possible to retain the basics without destroying young minds in the process of maintaining those basics. As Laurier LaPierre has stated on another occasion, there is much that is fascistic in the so-called back to basics movement. By that, I think he meant that such a slogan very much implies a suppression of the development of thought and of critical attitudes.

Mr. Cass attacks the last decade of "liberalized" education. It has become very fashionable lately to dump on the 1960s and in particular the educational advances that were produced by that turbulent yet dynamic and progressive decade. As one who taught all through the period in a dowtown Toronto high school, I am constantly astounded by the belief these days that we were all way out, somewhere on cloud nine. I was not nor was anyone I knew.

Perhaps in a few isolated and exotic suburban collegiates some things did get a little out of hand but the over-all results were very positive. A sterile and repressive system received a much-needed shaking up. No longer was it possible to intimidate teachers into turning out docile worker/consumers for an exploitive economic system. And certainly when viewed from this point in time, the 1960s were almost a lost golden age, when compared with this ghastly era of repression that we now seem to have entered.

To conclude such conferences as recently took place at the University of Victoria are very useful. They shake people up and focus attention on educational problems both within the profession and among the public at large. The teaching of basic skills has never really been abandoned in our system. What is threatened, however, by the "back to basics" movement is freedom of thought itself. — James N. Knechtel, 2067 Lorne Terrace.

Myths exploded

I would like to draw your attention to a television special aired by the CBC on March 7 entitled Exploding the Myths. This film endeavored to shatter the misconceptions surrounding the lives of the mentally retarded.

I sincerely hope that those residents of Redfern Street in Oak Bay who oppose the establishment of a group home in their neighborhood viewed this film.

Those who were unable to watch the program might be interested in some of the myths that were highlighted:

"The mentally retarded should be segregated in institutions. It's best for them . . . "

"Group homes kill nice neighborhoods."

Mines shut down

Mr. Donald Mustard, President of the B.C. Chamber of Mines, is confusing me. His recently reported statement is that the mining outlook in B.C. is "rosy" and other mining officials are singing the same tune. Last summer and fall the B.C. Mining Association was singing a different tune. In a bulletin they said: "No new mines are in sight. No mines have announced plans for production and no construction is underway."

Mr. Harvey Parliament, president of the Mining Association, said: "The plain fact is there are more mines closing in B.C. than are opening." Mr. Bob Matthew, director of the association said: "There will only be 18 operating mines in B.C. by this year's end. Unless we open more mines quickly the industry will largely disappear."

Would it be too uncharitable to suggest that the new-found confidence of the industry is a public relations job to bolster the failing image of Bill Bennett in an election year? I for one will take the statements of Mr. Mustard with a large grain of salt. — G. Marsandi, Vancouver.

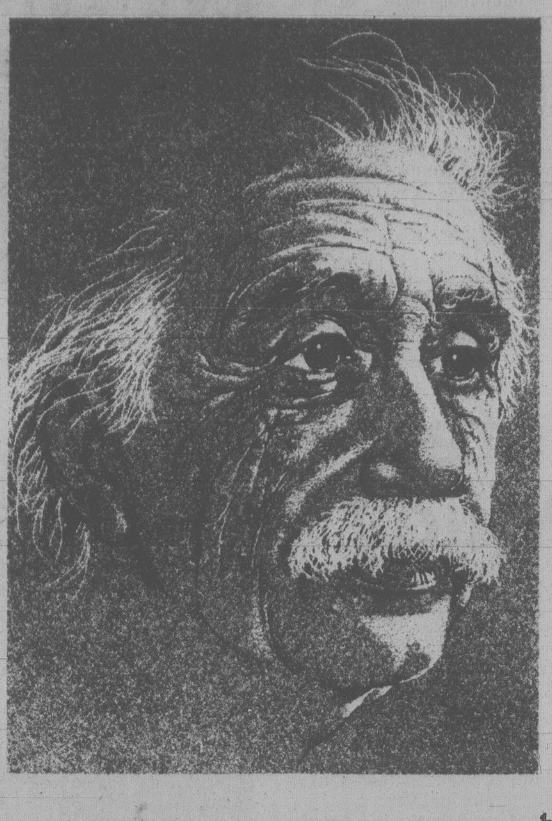
By RICHARD D. SMITH
The Washington Post



PRINCETON, N.J. — He was perhaps the greatest theorist of all time, enjoyed playing the violin and was a good shot with a squirt gun. He accurately foretold the findings of today's astrophysics a half-century before technology could catch up with his insights, and he had trouble at times finding his front door.

Albert Einstein is being lauded throughout the world on the centennial of his birth (March 14, 1879) as the giant of theoretical physics, a possessor of true genius, author, philosopher, humanitarian. But in this New Jersey community where he spent his last decades, an additional affection is expressed for Einstein the man — his warmth, kindness, child-like sense of play, even his frequent absent-mindedness.

Amid the outpouring of praise for the late Nobel Prize winner, friends often note that praise was one thing Einstein enduringly hesitated to accept during his life, although he bore his fame patiently.

"He was the most humble, genuinely humble, man you could possibly meet," one acquaintance says.

In 1933, as the political situation worsened in Germany, Einstein settled in this academically oriented town. He acquired a modest residence on quiet Mercer Street with his stepdaughter Margot and secretary Helen Dukas, who still lives there, and his wife Elsa (who died in 1936).

It was one mile to his office at the Institute for Advanced Study, where his "professorship" allowed him to continue his work. Einstein walked the distance every day in good weather and was soon encountered by other users of the tree-shaded throughfares — the neighborhood children.

Various youngsters befriended "old Mr. Einstein" (or vice versa) during his latter years. One boy met him punctually at 4 p.m. on Einstein's return walk, traded jokes with him and was often taken home to view the scientist's chemistry equipment while Einstein sat with a pad of paper on his knee and "wrote with his funny numbers." Before his death on April 18, 1955, Einstein was pursuing a Unified Field theory encompassing gravity, magnetism and atomic energy.

Two other boys discovered that the founder of the Special Theory of Relativity possessed considerable prowess with a water pistol. Each summer they would provide themselves and Einstein with squirt guns. He was a good shot both in pace and turn duelling and in cowboy style straight draw.

Several stories persist about Einstein's helping children with their arithmetic homework, but these are probably apocryphal. He turned down one such request with the gentle explanation that it would not be fair.

In Princeton, with its numerous amateur musicians, Einstein is much associated with his violin. He enjoyed playing on weekends with associates from the Institute for Advanced Study, or as part of local amateur chamber ensembles.

Always mannerly and considerate when receiving visitors, he simply tolerated many social forms. Once, while patiently sitting through a long after-dinner speech, he whispered to a friend, "I think I have a new definition of infinity." His grooming was casual, even careless, and now legend — bushy, untrimmed hair and mustache, worn sweaters and baggy pants made him a local character.

A theorist, Einstein did no empirical research, but worked out experiments and formulations in his mind. Intense concentration on abstract problems sometimes yielded, however, unexpected and unpublishable results.

One day, while walking along lost in thought, Einstein came upon an open street-construction trench and tumbled in. Local photographer Alan Richards happened by and snapped the picture.

Einstein emerged from the hole, unhurt but mortified. He begged Richards not to print the photo, and Richards replied by handing Einstein his film on the spot. For years afterward Einstein was the subject of many informal, but more complimentary, portraits by the photographer.

George Olsen, of nearby Belle Mead, N.J., recalls that Einstein's front door was painted red to aid the scientist in finding his way home. "He was ending up in everyone else's house on the street," says Olsen, who came in contact with the professor in the course of several second jobs Olsen worked while bringing up his family.

Olsen was doing routine maintenance on the Einsteins' oil furnace one afternoon while the physicist was also in the basement, cheerfully working on a sculpture in stone. "I think it was supposed to be Franklin Roosevelt," Olsen says. He noticed Einstein's tools. "He was using chisels that were real dime-store quality. I didn't know how he was making a dent in that granite, but he was."

Meanwhile, Margot Einstein, with characteristic old-world hospitality, brought the visiting worker a glass of lemonade.

Yet despite a reputation as the quintessential absentminded professor, Einstein was hardly out of touch with the realities, often grim, of the academic and political world.

Psychologist Hadley Cantril, who lived a few doors away on Mercer Street, once demonstrated a model of his now-famous trapezoidal room for Einstein. The physicist grasped at once the psychological and philosophical import of the perceptual illusions caused by the seemingly square interior.

Cantril remarked that he was frustrated by the refusal of fellow psychologists to take his findings seriously. Einstein comforted Cantril by noting, "I have learned, don't waste time trying to convince your colleagues."

Albert (Tad) Cantril, the late psychologist's son, remembers how Einstein disdained, sometimes with vehemence, attempts to venerate him. Tad's mother had wished that her young son and daughter might each have an autographed book as a memento of their great neighbor. So she called at Einstein's home and spoke with his secretary.

"She was right in the middle of explaining her visit to Miss Dukas," Cantril says, "and was talking about Einstein's being a great man when he came downstairs."

Hearing the conversation, at that juncture, the usually patient and gentle Einstein exploded in anger. "This is the cult of personality!" he shouted. "This is what breeds Hitlers and Stalins!"

At that moment a visiting colleague of Einstein's interceded and asked Mrs. Cantril to leave the books. She departed, "feeling about two inches high," but Einstein did autograph the volumes and return them.

The education of a S. Africa moderate

By SALLY QUINN

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — His name is Percy Qoboza and his favorite saying used to be that of Martin Luther King: "Either we learn to live together as brothers or we perish as fools."

It used to be.

That was before they closed down his paper and threw him in jail.

He used to be a moderate, the one all foreign journalists would come to when they visited South Africa, the one who would convince them it could all be worked out without violence. He used to be the black the white Afrikaners pointed to show how fair the system was, how blacks could indeed rise to the top, be successful. He is a former Nieman fellow, the best-known black journalist in South Africa and former editor of the two largest black newspapers in his country, The World and Weekend World.

Today Percy Qoboza is a different man. He is angry, despairing.

He sees more and more young blacks becoming militant; he sees a turning away from the white liberals who have traditionally championed their causes.

He sees a hardening of the views of the Afrikaners and he sees, finally, the inevitability of the violence both blacks and whites have always feared.

Today Percy Qoboza is out of jail. And he has another newspaper, the Post, the largest black newspaper still being published in South Africa.

But now he knows how tentative, how ephemeral, all this is. He knows that for no reason he could be thrown in jail, be banned, have his newspaper closed again.

So now the white Afrikaners don't mention him anymore. And now the white liberals get edgy when asked about good old Percy. And now, when visiting foreign journalists go to see him, they get a very different story from Percy Qoboza.

QOBOZA
. . .embittered

At lunch he will say — with shocking bluntness — to a white South African editor who has just been left jobless after his paper was merged with another: "Now you know what it feels like to be a kaffir" (in effect, "nigger.")

And the editor will reply sarcastically, "Oh Percy, try not to be your insufferable self."

Now Percy Qoboza sits in his office at the Post and gives an interview, joking occasionally with reporters who stick their heads in to say hi or chat.

But he is not in a joking mood.

"My whole experience has been a very traumatic one," he says. "I went through those 5 1/2 months in jail in periods of intense bitterness, sometimes bordering on pure and brutal hatred. It was a time of extreme soul—searching, thinking about my country for the first time in a quiet and serene atmosphere. At the end I said to myself, 'They've closed down my paper for no reason at all, I suspect because we continued to speak out and editorialize against injustice. They threw me in jail without telling me why my freedom was violated."

And so, he says, he felt there was only one conclusion to make. "I ended up saying to myself, 'I have tried my best to reflect society in an honest manner. I have suffered the supreme indignity. I have no more role to play here in South Africa. I must get out.'

"I must pack my cases, take my children and get out. I saw no hope for this society."

It was his children, he says, who convinced him to stay.

His 15-year-old daughter was strongly opposed and rallied his other children on her side.

"She told me, 'That's great,'" says Qoboza. "We'll all have a good life in New York, going to good schools. You'll get a good job on one of the papers and we will live happily ever afterwards. Except this story cannot end like all good stories. We'd still be confronted with the realities of this country. We would see on television or read in the papers of some relatives who died from police bullets.

"'We would see people we know on the streets from our neighborhood getting killed. We'll still read about and see people dying. Can we live without consciences?' my daughter asked me. 'When maybe, just maybe your physical presence in this country could help in some way to avoid disaster.'

"This confrontation with my children," says Qoboza, "kept us thinking. My wife and I, in spite of my experiences, in spite of the danger that I will still go back to jail, in spite of the danger that our home will still be bombed, I eventually felt I had to remain in this country."

He says he feels sorry for some white liberals, especially the ones who have been acting as a bridge between Afrikaners and the blacks. "Now," he says, "they seem to be getting it from both sides."

"We have an expression in the black community," he says, "that we would rather deal with the Afrikaners than with the white liberals. The liberal element is confused about where it stands. With the white Afrikaner, the lines are clearly defined on both sides."

Qoboza has to censor himself, he says, because there is a real possibility the government will shut his paper down as well and he worries about his staff and their futures. And he says with stunning simplicity, "It's better to be on the outside of jail and have a paper than to be in jail with no paper."

"We are living in a situation that is a continuous volcano about to erupt," he says. "You move around the streets of Soweto, you talk to people and it looks normal, quiet and peaceful. The government will be quick to tell you that. But in the midst of that calm and sweetness and apparent peace, if you put your ear to the ground you can hear the simmering volcano. And it is sure to erupt any day...over just one little stupid incident. It is the height of folly to think that Soweto is peaceful."

Lure of untouchable man

LONDON — Why do women go for the gurus? What is it that's so impellingly sexy about a man labelled taboo? Why are priests and doctors and psychiatrists so besieged by eager women?

We're scratching our heads about this in Britain at the moment for several reasons.

There's a vicar whose long friendship with a widow is under debate: has pastoral care broken down in his parish, his superiors must decide, or has it not? The most august Methodist in the country, the venerable Lord Soper, has asked for legal protection from a woman who, it's alleged, hurls herself after his car and throws love and abuse at him in about equal torrents. And there is a move among the general doctors to get themselves made a little less taboo: they want to abolish the rule that gets them struck off the medical register if they get entangled — in any sense — with a woman who is also a patient.

You might have thought there were enough men around who were not protected by a clerical collar or a stethoscope; you might have thought the place was crawling with available lorry drivers and accountants, salesmen and mechanics and administrators. But no. There is obviously an irresistible fascination about any man who goes around loudly labelled Forbidden — Do Not Touch.

Freud would have a word for it, of course. Freud would say it was a desire to go to bed with one's real father that made gazing at the clerical Father So-and-So seem such a dream. Or that it was a subconscious desire to go back to being an infant, to crawl into Daddy's all-sheltering lap and never have to go it alone ever again. Well, maybe.

But there are several simpler explanations. The obvious one is that, to begin with, it seems such a safe sort of adoration. You begin by thinking you have none but the very purest feelings towards him; that it is, of course, only his spiritual qualities that interest you at all.

You want to see him merely so that he can sort you out about transubstantiation, or whether rhubarb is really good for rheumatism; or what it is that causes these nervous fits you suffer from every time you lean out of a high window.

You can easily kid yourself, let alone him, that it is only a proper respect and admiration for his enormous wisdom that causes you to gaze at him so soulfully. And by the time you admit to yourself that it's the curve of his lovely chin as well as the line of his lovely argument, you're in the mire, over the boots, stuck.

But perhaps, even more, it's that men who have deliberately put themselves out of range, even if it's only during clinic hours or while they're on the Judge's Bench or up in the pulpit — must represent a challenge. "Who's to say he's immune to my charms," a part of you is thinking, "he's a man, isn't he?" O.K., so it's supposed to be a totally impersonal relationship — what's so impersonal about my 36-26-36?

Doctors may be trying quite hard not to be made to have higher moral standards than anyone else out of hours, but they're still prudent enough to lug in a female nurse if they have to examine a prurient patient in hours; getting a plaster saint down off his pedestal remains one of the strongest fantasies that rapacious women entertain.

There are so few real challenges left. The heroes on TV have been changed into nincompoops for the sake of situation comedy. The elders of the Church fall over themselves to emphasize how permissive they are these days, how tolerant of little sexual foibles; even the entrenchedly married are quite likely to sound apologetic about it, not superior.

The high and the mighty, the nobel, irreproachable, untouchable man that no one can get, shines like a good deed in a naughty world. And all any woman wants of him is to get him to be a little less good and bit more naughty. Really, we're a very perverse sex. Almost as perverse, in fact, as the sex that thinks it's a kick to get hold of any girl who's a virgin.

Tree-Saving Plan Endorsed

While its controversial tree-cutting bylaw is still going through its umpteenth draft, Saanich council will be asked Monday to adopt a package of tree protection policies.

The policy statements, endorsed by the finance and legislative committee Tuesday night, are mostly of a general nature involving no infringement of individual property rights — the basic cause of opposition to earlier versions of the proposed bylaw.

For example, they include educational measures such as training seminars on vegetation protection for building inspectors and other employees, as well as members of planning and design advisory groups.

But one of the policy commitments — the protection of public and private forests — contains the seeds of controversy.

A staff report noted that in the case of privately owned forests, protection should include a ban on commercial logging in Saanich.

Municipal solicitor Chris Nation told the committee such a ban could be imposed, although it could not be applied to provincial forests or lands covered by tree farm licences.

However, no alderman specifically advocated the prohibition of commercial logging.

Planning assistant David Harper said during an introductory slide presentation that commercial logging is still a substantial cause of tree loss in the municipality.

Using data from aerial photographs dating back to 1948, Harper presented some sombre statistics of tree loss over about 5,900 acres of land in the Gordon Head-Ten Mile Point and Broadmead-North Quadra areas.

He said in 1948 the tree cover extended over about 2,500 acres or 42 per cent of the total.

But on the basis of subsequent air photos Harper estimated the tree cover has been reduced in 1979 to about 1,230 acres or 20 per cent.

And he said projections to the year 2000 indicate a further reduction to 535 acres or only nine per cent of the total area.

Saanich Blasted For Works Policy

Saanich municipality has been told by the Vancouver Island Equipment Owners' Association to stay out of the construction business.

The association claims in a letter to council that the municipal work force is over-staffed, and that the municipality could save taxpayers a lot of money by contracting out most of its construction work.

The letter suggests council establish a policy that any job costing more than $10,000 automatically be put out to tender.

There was mixed reaction to the association's viewpoint at a meeting Tuesday of council's policy and management committee.

Municipal engineer Clifford Warren pointed out that in having the potential to tackle construction jobs itself, the municipality is able to provide some sort of assurance work is done on a competitive basis.

"If we don't retain the capability for construction work with our own crews the municipality could be held up to ransom under certain circumstances," he warned.

The engineer noted that with the construction industry now in a lean period, contractors are hungry for work and clamoring for projects being undertaken by municipalities.

He said that in 1977 out of a capital works program of $3.8 million, the municipal work force undertook work to the value of about $1.4 million or about 35 per cent of the total.

While Warren apparently considered that a reasonable proportion, Ald. Howard Sturrock said it was too high.

Sturrock said a policy of tendering out all jobs down to the $10,000 level, as the association had suggested, would probably be impracticable because it would involve time-consuming work in drawing up detailed specifications.

But he suggested the policy be applied to all construction above the $50,000 mark.

The matter was referred to council's public works committee for discussion, to provide the association and any other interested parties an opportunity to express their views.

Cut Police From 5%: Saanich

Saanich will try to have the entire $3.8 million police board budget excluded from calculation of the municipality's own 1979 budget increase.

Council's policy and management committee agreed Tuesday to press the case for exemption with the provincial government's inspector of municipalities because the police board budget poses an exceptional problem for Saanich in its efforts to comply with the government-imposed ceiling of a five per cent over-all budget increase.

The Saanich submission will point out that only 12 of B.C.'s 158 municipalities face this particular problem. The rest are served under contract by the RCMP and do not bear full policing costs.

It will also note, among other things:

— That the police board is an autonomous body and council cannot withhold formal approval of its budget.

— That if the board had ended last year with a $200,000 surplus, instead of the actual surplus of less than $80,000, Saanich would not now have to seek exemption from the five-per-cent limitation.

Move to Quit Federation

Saanich council's finance committee recommended Tuesday night the municipality withdraw its membership in the Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM).

The vote margin was 4 to 3, with Aldermen David Paterson, Geoff Vantreight and Howard Sturrock opposed to the pull-out move.

Mayor Mel Couvelier agreed with Ald. John Mika that it's questionable whether Saanich derives any real value from its $2,650 membership fee in the organization.

Mika said continued involvement seems particularly pointless since the federal government decided to abandon its urban affairs ministry, and Couvelier commented that the FCM appears to exist "primarily as a propaganda body for the federal government."

Unexpected Interest

Public response to a Saanich questionnaire on garbage collection has been more than double what the municipality expected, Mayor Mel Couvelier told the finance committee Tuesday night.

Couvelier said staff had been expecting that about 3,000 to 4,000 completed questionnaires would be returned, but the total already stands at more than 9,000.

The committee had earlier suggested Saanich have the data analyzed by municipal staff; but, in view of the volume of response, the mayor said the job should be handed to a private consultant.

The committee recommended the Victoria firm R & K Consulting undertake the complete analysis of the questionnaires at a cost of $3,500.

On a related subject, Ald. Howard Sturrock said several residents have expressed interest in the proposed establishment of a citizens' task force to advise Saanich on the promotion of garbage recycling.

'See McGeer' on High School Cut

Gordon Head residents angry over a provincial government decision to cut a $1.3 building program at Lambrick Park high school should protest to the man responsible — Education Minister Pat McGeer, Greater Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup said Tuesday.

She said requests to the board for help are useless because trustees can't change ministry policy.

Students, parents and teachers, at a school board meeting Monday night held at Lambrick, asked trustees to battle the ministry.

But they were told drastic cuts last week to the board's 1979 capital budget indicate the ministry is not prepared to spend money on building projects in this district.

Pickup said the ministry was informed the Lambrick project is a priority item.

Extensive construction was planned for the school, but the ministry chose to ignore the district's planning estimates in favor of its own inaccurate information, she charged.

Pickup said the best way to get McGeer to change his mind is for residents to take action against the ministry.

Picketing or deluging his office with letters would be more effective than anything the board can do, she said.

Lambrick school was described by parents advisory council chairman Wally Lea as a half-empty shell with more standard classrooms outside than inside.

Lea said trustees should be disgusted by the ministry's cutbacks, not just disappointed.

"Roll up your sleeves and battle on our behalf because you are elected to do just that," he said.

Students stormed out of the room when the question period ended before they had a chance to speak, but said in the hall they might picket the Legislative Buildings.

Problems include poor ventilation, inadequate heating and overcrowding, according to the students, who said they are fed up with substandard conditions and want the school completed.

One student said in winter she must wear mittens in class and jump over puddles and climb gangplanks to get from one portable classroom to another.

Another student said he smelled gasoline fumes in class and said students have no place to eat lunch.

Principal David Voth said he is uncomfortable about protesting, but feels it is neccessary.

He blamed the ministry more than the board.

He said Lambrick was constructed in 1976 to accommodate 800 students in Grades 8 to 12 eventually, but the project was abandoned after the first phase of construction because of declining enrolment in other parts of the district.

The area around Lambrick is still growing.

The school has 550 students in four permanent classrooms and six annexes.

Voth said he wants to see completion of the second phase.

He said he will request a meeting with the board so students can put their case to trustees.

But Voth said he wants to keep the protest civilized and will try to persuade students not to demonstrate.

U Strike: 'No One Cares'

BURNABY (CP) — Simon Fraser University, a campus of student activists and demonstrations in the 1960s, is running fairly smoothly behind picket lines put up last week by members of the Association of University and College Employees.

"This strike is a joke," said one student. "This isn't the 1960s — no one cares."

A university spokesman couldn't say how many students were crossing the picket lines but said the student parking lot is full as usual. Students polled complained more about a lack of cafeteria facilities and washrooms than locked classrooms.

Eight classes in the arts faculty were cancelled Tuesday and the union said that 67 of 350 faculty members were not crossing picket lines.

Students, however, said they are not yet worried by the disruptions.

The science and education faculties were operating normally. "As long as this thing doesn't develop into something really big, I'm not worried about finishing my year," said one science major.

The strike began last Thursday after the university began selective lockouts in response to three months of rotating strikes by the 650 union members.

Negotiations broke down over wages. The university has offered six per cent in a two-year contract while the union wants six per cent the first year and three per cent the second.

A statement issued by the university administration Tuesday said its offer of binding arbitration to settle the dispute stands.

Reacting to union statements that its members make only average wages, the administration said they are among the highest in the province.

"Let the arbitrator decide whether they are average or not," said the statement. "The arbitrator's award would be consistent with the results of such a comparison."

Earlier Tuesday, the union scrapped plans to travel to Victoria and brief Education Minister Pat McGeer, Labor Minister Allan Williams and the New Democratic Party caucus on the strike.

Union spokesman Kathy Moore said the trip was postponed indefinitely because the union needs people on the picket line and at strike headquarters.

No Reason to Block Base: Jamieson

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — British Columbians have no reason to protest against the proximity of major United States military installations, according to External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson.

The minister said fears about a controversial Trident nuclear submarine base located about 80 kilometres south of the Canada-U.S. border are overblown.

"It may be a regional concern, but you have to look at the other side of the coin," Jamieson told reporters following a speech to about 200 Liberal party members in this Vancouver-area community.

Jamieson said Canada has no reason to voice official opposition to the Trident nuclear weapons system because the U.S. has "the right to do whatever they want in their own country."

Protests against the Trident facility where 15 nuclear-armed submarines will be based have involved thousands of demonstrators from both the U.S. and Canada since 1975.

Church and labor organizations and the city of Vancouver have been among those voicing opposition to the project.

Band Probe Begins Apr. 1

KELOWNA (CP) — The federal Indian affairs department will begin an investigation April 1 into the accounts and financial records of the Westbank Indian Band near here, the band's chief said Tuesday.

Chief Ron Derrickson said he requested the investigation, adding the ministry will send an auditor to make a complete review of the band's records to clear the air.

A petition circulated among the band last week called for the dismissal of Chief Derrickson on grounds of mismanagement.

Prisoner's Fate Weighed

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canadian Penitentiary Service says a decision will be made within a month on the fate of Andrew Bruce, a prisoner at the British Columbia Penitentiary in nearby New Westminster who has played a role in a number of hostage-takings.

Bruce is serving a life sentence for murder.

Four psychiatrists who have interviewed Bruce report that he has potential for treatment, but they do not agree where Bruce should be held.

He could be sent to a federal institution at Matsqui in the Fraser Valley or to a prison in Ontario.

The psychiatrists said the trouble with keeping Bruce in B.C. is that he is so well-known.

However, if Bruce was sent to Ontario, he is involved with court cases which would necessitate him being returned to B.C. to testify, and he has applied for permission to marry Sandra Meadley, one of the hostages taken at the B.C. Pen in 1978.

Permission for the two to marry is under consideration.

Proposed Bylaw Draws Fire

The Alcohol and Drug Commission will oppose a bylaw amendment proposed by the Vancouver city planning department which would ban establishment in some areas of the city of treatment and rehabilitation clinics for victims of alcoholism and drug abuse.

Chairman Bert Hoskin said the action is completely unwarranted and a discriminatory.

$1,000 Given Wallace Fund

3rd UFAWU Man Refuses to Talk

VANCOUVER (CP) — A federal combines department inquiry into the British Columbia fishing industry continued to run into a wall of silence Tuesday.

George Hewison, secretary-treasurer of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, refused to answer countless questions put to him.

On Monday, Jack Nichol, president of the UFAWU, declined to answer questions relating to the 1971 fishermen's strike.

Earlier, former union president Homer Stevens also refused to answer any questions.

The union leaders argue that if they do answer the questions of the restrictive trade practices committee the union or its leaders might be open to criminal charges.

The committee does not have the power to compel persons to answer questions, but can apply for a court order to force them to answer.

Hunger Strike Ends After Day

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — A hunger strike by about 200 prisoners at the British Columbia Penitentiary here ended after 24 hours Tuesday when the men ate their lunches.

Both penitentiary spokesmen and prison activists said they were not sure what caused the strike, which started Monday when the men picked up their meals, then dumped them in waste baskets.

Jack Stewart, of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, said no prisoners in solitary or in protective custody were involved.

Returned and Took Pulse, Accused Testifies

A man accused of first-degree murder in a stabbing Oct. 12 told an assize court jury Tuesday he returned to the scene late at night to see what had happened.

Sidney Blair Rhodes, 22, admitted stabbing Susan Marie Calve, 17, in the throat on the afternoon of Oct. 12 in a wood near Cedar Hill golf course but was unable to explain why he did it.

He specifically denied that he sexually assaulted her.

He returned to the scene in the early hours of the following day after being dropped off by a friend with whom he had been drinking beer in a pub that evening.

"I more or less froze," he said. "I went down on one knee and put my hand where the pulse should be. She was cold and stiff." He said he was scared and ran to his home on Burton Street.

"Something went wrong that day that I didn't know about," he said. "It shouldn't have happened. I don't know what happened, I just don't know."

Mr. Justice D. E. Andrews asked Rhodes if he felt remorse when he returned to the scene and saw the body.

Rhodes said he felt upset, uptight and very quiet.

The judge asked him to explain why he didn't phone police instead of saying nothing for three days. Rhodes said he couldn't explain that.

Rhodes said he drank between 16 and 20 glasses of beer starting in the late morning of Oct. 12 which an expert witness, Zenon Samila, said would produce a blood alcohol level of between .18 and over .38 per cent depending on the rate of absorption into the blood stream.

He also said he made a "connection" with a girl named Sandy outside a store on Douglas for six grams of the chemical drug MDA which he swallowed during the course of his drinking before running into Calve on his way home in the afternoon.

The girl, Sandy Ferrikl, said there were five or six "hits" of MDA and Rhodes paid one $20 bill for them.

An expert witness called by the defence, Cpl. Chester Kary of the RCMP drug squad, said if a person took six hits over a period of three hours it would be a high dosage which in some instances would produce hallucination. There would also be an increase in the person's activity because MDA is a stimulant while alcohol is a depressant.

In his cross-examination, Rhodes said he wasn't too sure how his belt came to be at the death scene. It could have slipped off. He denied taking off his pants.

He wasn't sure but agreed it was possible that he showed Calve how to slit a person's throat in a joking incident several months earlier in which she took a knife to his throat asking for the return of $160 which she and a girlfriend had given Rhodes for two ounces of Colombian Gold marijuana which was never delivered.

Rhodes said his contact never showed up to deliver the marijuana.

He agreed it was possible he said to Calve that you have to go for the jugular with a knife.

He denied suddenly injecting the subject of rape and murder into a conversation at a party on the evening of Oct. 13, as testified to by two earlier witnesses, and denied the statement of one witness that he told her he could rape her.

Rhodes said he ran into Calve on the afternoon of Oct. 12 while walking home and told her he'd try to get her some money for the outstanding drug deal.

He denied telling her that story just so she would go with him.

Asked if all that was in his mind was taking a shortcut through the wood to get some money, Rhodes agreed.

Rhodes told the jury he was "pretty stoned" and he felt like a time bomb which was going to burst as they walked through the wood with her in front. He took out a knife, she turned and he put it in the front of her neck at the base and she went down.

Because of possible identification, he said, he removed her clothing and ran off, dumping it in a drainage culvert.

Asked how she got 40 stab wounds in her neck, back and abdomen and that her clothing disclosed no rips or cuts, Rhodes said: "I just don't know."

He agreed he concocted a story to his mother about being in a fight over a pool game at a beer parlor when he arrived home about 3:50 p.m. Oct. 12 and that he told the same story to a friend and two other persons.

He also agreed he lied to a friend in the morning about having been in a fight with a man who drove them home the night he returned to the body.

He agreed he told his friend to tell his parents, if they asked, that he had returned the Calve's passport, found by his father in a backyard incinerator, that he had returned it. He agreed he never returned the passport.

Asked by Crown counsel Brian Smith the purpose of all these lies, Rhodes said: "I felt like that would be the end of it."

Smith suggested he was not too stoned to lie.

"That's the first thing that came to my head," he replied.

He denied Smith's assertion that he took the girl to the wood with the intention of having intercourse with her and that he stabbed her after she resisted.

His mother, Mrs. Georgie Rhodes, said there was blood on her son's cheek and hands when he came home but she didn't notice any blood on his clothing which she washed.

Cross-examined by Smith, she said her son appeared normal when he returned home and she had no difficulty talking with him and he had supper at home that evening and assisted with drywalling.

During his main testimony, Rhodes agreed he has a criminal record for possession of an offensive weapon, which he said was his father's shotgun in a suicide attempt, six counts of breaking and entering and theft to which he was sentenced to six months in 1974, breaking and entering and theft to which he was sentenced to two years less one day in 1976, and breaking and entering with intent.

The trial continues.

City Chinatown 'Threatened'

LAI
. . . to conduct study

Chinese communities throughout North America are being increasingly eroded by urban growth and Victoria's Chinatown is facing just such a threat, a University of Victoria geography professor said today.

Dr. David Lai, who will conduct a study of Chinatown for city hall, said development in the downtown core is likely to force changes on the nearby Chinese community.

Lai said he hopes his survey will ensure that the area develops the way the Chinese people want it to.

Lai said he will contact the more than 20 clubs, societies, and other groups in Chinatown to make them aware of the need to become involved in the planning process.

"I hope we can beautify Chinatown and make it part of the heritage of the Chineses community here, and at the same time revitalize the area's economy as well."

Lai said Victoria's Chinatown is the oldest in Canada and as such worthy of a special planning effort.

He also said other communities have run into problems by redeveloping their Chinese communities without adequate planning.

In Calgary, for instance, he said a large housing development had been built in Chinatown — and then it was discovered no one wanted to move in.

He said Victoria's Chinatown was once largely residential, and strictly for the Chinese, but it has changed greatly over the decades.

"If you go down to Chinatown at night you will find that there are more non-Chinese there than Chinese," he said.

"In the past Chinatown was for the Chinese only, but now it is for all of Victoria, that's a point I want to stress."

Lai will be given three months and an $8,000 budget to determine how the Chinese community wants to see Chinatown develop.

Lai's appointment on Tuesday came about because of a heritage advisory committee recommendation stating the city should be looking at opportunities for the rehabilitation and redevelopment of the area.

But, cautioned the heritage committee, "before any physical planning is initiated, it is essential to determine what the Chinese community sees as the future role for Chinatown."

Region Helps Oilmen Find Tank Farm Site

Capital Regional District director Shirley Dowell is looking for land — preferrably 25 acres of waterfront with deep docking facilities in the Greater Victoria area.

Dowell, who has been given the task of relocating the Inner Harbor oil tanks, held an in-camera meeting with five oil companies representatives on Tuesday to find out how much they have done about finding new sites.

Chevron Canada Ltd. on Harbour Road and Shell Canada Ltd. on Songhees Road are due to move in 1981. They and Gulf Canada Ltd., which holds a lease on Songhees which expires in 1987, have been told their leases will not be renewed.

Company representatives estimate it will cost $12 million to relocate and the move will take two years.

Texaco Canada and Imperial Oil representatives also attended the meeting. Their tanks are on company-owned property.

Dowell says the regional district would like to see all the companies relocated on one site and the representatives welcomed her involvement in the search for a site.

"They all live in Vancouver and Calgary and they don't know the local scene so it would be harder for them to find property," Dowell said.

She said she has five possible sites for initial exploration.

Peace Treaty Signed Next Week: Egypt

for presentation of the treaty documents to Parliament within the next two weeks and possibly as early as next week. The parliament is expected to approve them after a stormy debate. Begin has had he will resign if the Knesset should vote against them.

"I believe our situation is much better and we are close to peace," Housing Minister David Levy said.

One Jordanian newspaper, meanwhile, condemned the peace treaty proposals today as a recipe for disaster and said the both Egypt and Israel had been mesmerized by Carter during his visit just ended.

The English-language Jordan Times said in an editorial that while the Egyptians and Israelis "may be prepared -- even eager -- to put their fates in the hands of the American faith healer, it is the rest of us in the Middle East who will pay the consequences."

Protests against the proposed treaty also erupted for the fifth straight day today in towns throughout the occupied West Bank of the Jordan.

There were reports of student strikes in Beit Sahur and Ramallah, although a military spokesman said teachers in both places had showed up for work. Protesting students set up roadblocks in Ramallah, the spokesman said.

In Arab East Jerusalem, schoolchildren threw rocks at Israeli cars and set fire to tires in the street. Police arrested several of the young demonstrators and the situation was under control, the spokesman said.

On Tuesday, ultra-nationalist Israeli settlers forced demonstrating Arabs at gunpoint to dismantle barricades of burning tires in Ramallah.

ting, with the coast guard and other services nearby and sometimes our own boats involved, the risk would be awfully high."

The price war for roe has created chaos in the industry.

On Tuesday, Oakland Fisheries in Victoria announced it will hire 450 fewer workers for its processing season.

Oakland is paying $2,500 a ton for the roe. Last year it paid about half that amount.

Federal fisheries officer Larry Duke said the price could jump as high as $4,000 a ton.

"It's got completely out of control," Shelley said. "With the competition, prices have gone up $500 a ton within a matter of hours."

Shelley blames the problems on the tremendous increase in the number of processing licences handed out this year by the government.

He said there are currently 128 processing companies vying for this year's roe quota of 59,000 tons. Last year there were about 70 companies and the quota was 68,000 tons.

"It seems everything that can float is out there buying fish," he said. "There are even old tug boats with boxes on deck. Most are paying cash."

Shelley said he does not believe the market can support a price of $3,500 a ton and predicted there will be losses throughout the industry.

"Some of the newer companies are trying to get their foot in the door. Maybe they're prepared to take a loss just to get established," he said.

Border Duels Flare

SIDON (AP) — Intermittent artillery duels flared between Palestinian guerrillas and Israeli border gunners in southern Lebanon Tuesday night.

Provincial authorities said the casualty toll rose to two killed and 10 wounded in 24 hours.

A spokesman for the governor's office of this provincial capital said all the victims were Lebanese civilians from the Moslem town of Nabatiyeh and the neighboring village of Kfar Tibnit.

The spokesman said a five-year-old school boy from Zotar, near Nabatiyeh, was killed Tuesday and a 14-year-old girl from Kfar Tibnit died as a result of the shelling, which later died down.

The guerrilla-controlled Palestine news agency Wafa reported two Israeli gunboats shelled the Palestinian-inhabited town of Damour, 20 kilometres south of Beirut.

Textile Gouging Charged

porting much of the fabric and re-selling it to their customers.

Since import quotas are assigned on the basis of previous imports, many domestic textile manufacturers now will continue to import the fabric while clothing manufacturers will not be able to get it.

"It's a little bit like being rewarded for breaking your own arm," said Clark.

In addition, revenue department investigators have concluded that the declared value of imported textiles for duty purposes from Far Eastern countries is lower than the "fair market value."

That investigation, started because of complaints from the textile industry, could result in higher values being assigned to imports before the 22-25 per-cent duty is calculated.

That will push up import prices even higher and will allow domestic suppliers to raise their prices.

Clark, whose institute acts as a lobby group for clothing manufacturers, has urged Revenue Minister Tony Abbott to delay any such move.

He said that many of the wide variety of fabrics required by clothing makers are not manufactured in Canada and there would be no benefit to Canadian industry by raising the duty on them.

There is already little competition among domestic suppliers because of the small Canadian market.

For example, there is only one denim supplier, one woven cotton supplier and one polyester-cotton supplier. There are only two producers of woven nylon and two of woven polyester.

Barbara Sulzenko, a policy analyst with the Consumers' Association of Canada (CAC), said she wasn't surprised the pricing situation had developed as a result of the quotas.

The CAC had strongly opposed clothing quotas when they were first applied in 1976. The CAC also opposed restraints on textile imports they say will mean higher prices and less choice for consumers.

"It's exactly as we predicted," Sulzenko said of the current situation.

Nobody Can Find Key To Magic Circle Puzzle

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Greater Victoria municipalities have saved some of their historic houses but have failed to preserve the prehistoric burial cairns and mysterious magic stone circles which once dotted the area.

Gone are more than two hundred cairns and circles which once graced the slopes of Cadboro Bay and Uplands Park.

Homes now occupy many of the the ancient sites around the bay while in the park most of the boulders which marked the cairns have been scattered or removed.

Most of the monuments also have vanished from Central and North Saanich.

At the turn of the century the cairns and the circles of rocks were a major attraction. Their origin, then as now, is a mystery.

Don Abbott, curator of the Provincial Museum archeology department, says the best place to see the cairns and circles is on the Department of National Defence property at Rocky Point where they are protected.

There are more than 150 in one area and they line up east to west with a magic circle in East Sooke Park.

Most of the stone monuments were not destroyed deliberately, Abbott said, but removed by people unaware of their significance.

Burial cairns differ in size and shape, but are usually three to six feet in diameter. The stones are placed around the burial sites. In others, the stones are laid in a square.

The stone circles seem to have had something to do with ancient rituals. Some were on the top of hills or mountains, such as Mount Newton. Stone bowls have been found been near the sites.

Present-day natives seem to know nothing about the origin of the cairns and circles but there is evidence Indians used the circles as as a source of power.

Abbott has no idea of the origin of the circles but has a hunch the cairns were built within the last 1,000 years.

Other experts think the circles and cairns originated with a nomadic people who came to B.C. three or four thousand years ago, and were replaced or assimilated by the natives. Some continued to make use of the circles. A few may have kept up the practice of building the cairns.

The circles, also found on the mainland and Gulf Islands, have intrigued many people. Some have even reported psychic experiences while walking alone in the vicinity of them.

There seems little doubt that Indians used the circles as a source of power or to communicate with spirits. A person had to be alone, and apparently some even slept on the sites.

The circle which once existed on Mount Newton probably was used for puberty rites.

The museum has the account of an elderly Indian, who as a boy of 12, was sent to the circle. He was instructed to bath in a pond and stay the night.

"As I looked around after my second bath I heard a loud whirring above my head, and many leaves floated down to the ground at my feet. Looking up, I saw a giant bird . . . the Thunderbird itself . . . soaring in the sky . . ."

Some believe the ancient sages or medicine men, as they were called in North America, used the circles for practising astrology.

But the problem with attempting to interpret prehistoric monuments is that their builders held a different view of life and the universe. The earth was a living organism — not a dead body. The spirit was life expressed in man, plants birds, animals, fish and even minerals.

Concern is the strongest feeling that beams through when you meet Dr. Eugene Kaellis.

Best known perhaps as the Cool Aid Dentist, he shows concern for patients and even for a columnist trying to conduct an interview.

"Are you afraid of dentists' offices?" he asks as we look for somewhere to sit.

Not as long as I know I don't have to stay there, I explain.

"Well, just so it won't be too starkly realistic, you can sit in that one and I'll sit here," he says as we switch roles and the dentist lounges back in the patient's chair.

And this slightly-built man whose black beard is tinged with grey shows equal concern for hospital patients as he talks rapidly in his unmistakable New York accent (he's lived in Canada for almost 12 years) about their need for an ombudsperson.

Kaellis, a member now for two years of the Victoria General Hospital Board, proposed to the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society (of which he is also a member) that a patient representative or ombudsman be appointed for the hospital. That was back in September but since then the board, most of whose members are in fact elected by the society, narrowly voted to turn down the proposal.

The issue is still not dead, though, as the matter has been referred for further study to the board's quality assurance committee headed by Dr. Michael Ashwood-Smith.

Kaellis will again introduce his proposal at the Society's semi-annual meeting on April 26 when members will get another chance to vote on the ombudsperson question. (Those who are not members or whose membership has lapsed may become eligible to vote by sending $2 dues by March 26 to SVIHS at Victoria General Hospital.

In the meantime, Kaellis is somewhat staggered by the fuss his proposal has caused.

"The Society was overwhelmingly in favor of an ombudsperson but still the board turned it down," he says.

Personnel committee chairman Carol Pickup has said the position would need a salary perhaps as high as $25,000 a year and, in view of a severely constrained budget, the hospital couldn't afford it. The committee also pointed out that newly-appointed provincial ombudsman Karl Friedmann would be responsible for hospital problems.

Neither of these reasons hold water, says Kaellis.

"The average stay for a patient in hospital is one week," he points out. "Do you think a patient fed up with the care is going to take the matter up with the provincial ombudsman when it might take months to resolve? Of course not! The patients need someone on the spot."

Recently three new positions were created at the hospital, Kaellis says and people were appointed to fill them.

"These positions were created to improve the hospital — which is exactly the idea behind the ombudsperson — and it was a routine matter. So why are they making so much fuss about the relatively small amount of money involved for an ombudsperson?"

Kaellis says he knows the answer but won't accept it.

"The administration is frightened of the idea and is marshalling its troops against it," he says. "No one has come out and said it's not a good idea, just that we can't afford it and we don't need it. It's just those 500 or so other hospitals that need one."

Part of the problem, of course, is that old fear of the unknown, of the new. For out of the more than 500 hospitals in North America already having ombudspersons, only around 10 are in Canada and all of those are in the east. So VGH would be the first in the west.

Vancouver General, biggest hospital in Canada, still doesn't have an ombudsman representing patients.

"If they had had one, think of the trouble that might have been avoided last summer," Kaellis says.

"I'm not suggesting we have those kind of problems here because we don't," he says. "But we don't have to get that bad either before we start to improve."

What sort of recommendations though would a hospital administration be afraid that an ombudsman might make to the board? Kaellis grins and quotes from an old movie when a commander discovers a curvacious Greta Garbo hiding in man's uniform: "Life is gloriously full of the unexpected."

"It's just that hospitals develop a whole feeling of passivity for patients by doing everything for them," he says. "This has to change. Patients have to become more involved in their treatment — and this is just one small way of aiming in that direction."

2,4-D Okayed By Aldermen

Use of the controversial weed killer 2,4-D by city crews was approved Tuesday by Victoria city council's parks committee.

The committee gave the nod to 2,4-D — and 11 other chemicals — after parks administrator Cliff Bate said his work would be handicapped without the spray.

"If you deny us this management aid then you're going to be faced with considerable costs," said Bate in presenting his spraying program for 1979.

"All the experience we have in 30 years would indicate that 2,4-D is an extremely safe herbicide to use."

Committee chairman John Hayes said the city uses only one per cent of the 2,4-D that's sprayed on city gardens and lawns every year.

Stolen Coin Alert

Coin dealers in Greater Victoria have been advised to be on the lookout for about $2,200 worth of gold and silver coins stolen from an Oak Bay home.

A police spokesman said today the thieves were highly selective.

They took seven Canadian $100 gold coins, a Canadian gold sovereign, a South African Krugerrand and numerous Canadian and U.S. silver dollars.

Police refused to identify the owner and would only say the house is in the Foul Bay-Crescent Road area.

Also taken were a camera, four lenses, a tripod, a pair of binoculars, a portable cassette recorder and a calculator, with a total value of about $2,100.

Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

Closure of Mall Termed Stupid By Merchants

Closing Government Street to traffic is either dumb or premature, merchants said today.

Eaton's manager Reginald Hind, past president of both the Downtown Business Association and the Downtown Victoria Association, said he is totally opposed to any closure.

HIND
. . . totally opposed

It is "a stupid idea," he said, because the drive up Government is a prime attraction for visitors. Pedestrians have wide sidewalks to use and there was no problem last summer, despite the crowds.

Hind was reacting to a proposal, to be voted on by city council's traffic subcommittee on March 21, to close Government certain hours from May 21 to Sept. 3. The mall would be closed from noon to 4 p.m. and again from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Concerts and other events would be presented on the street during those hours.

Merchants interviewed by the Times expressed concern on the following points:

— Closure would interfere with the free bus route in the downtown core, forcing it along Wharf where there are few stores.

— Concerts would create noise, litter and loitering.

— Cars would continue to use crossing streets and there would be a safety hazard because people would be walking along the street.

— Concerts are more appropriate for the Inner Harbor area or Beacon Hill Park than at the doorway of stores.

— And finally, the merchants should have been consulted long before council considered putting the matter to a vote.

Doug Lewis, president of the Downtown Victoria Association, said he was cool to the idea but the decision should come from the merchants.

Joan Bomford, vice-president of the DVA and a Government merchant, said if the issue has to be decided now she would vote no.

"There has to be much more discussion on this before we come to a decision. There are so many unanswered questions," she said.

Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Mel Cooper said a survey of merchants taken Tuesday showed a concern that the proposal is being rushed.

Man Held In Obed Shooting

Saanich police refused to release details other than that shots were fired and a revolver seized.

Police were called to a house after receiving a report of a threat being made.

Mrs. John Frederick, a nearby resident, said she heard a shot shortly before 11 p.m. About 10 minutes later police arrived.

She said she saw officers struggling with a man on the porch of a house. During the struggle another shot was discharged.

Charges are expected to be laid.

Financial Houses Set for Free Share Crush

Credit unions, banks and other financial institutions are gearing up for Thursday — the first day application can be made for the controversial, free B.C. Resources Investment Corp. shares.

(See also page 52).

Opposition politicians have attacked the share giveaway as a political gimmick that could cost B.C. taxpayers an estimated $20 million in distribution and other costs.

They claim a "personal" message from Premier Bill Bennett at the top of each application form is proof that the share scheme is a Socred political ploy.

One credit union, Westcoast Savings, will set up booths in shopping malls, move into schools, run its own advertisements in the media and undertake a bulk mailing program to encourage Victoria area residents to apply for the shares.

A spokesperson for the securities division of the Bank of Montreal said she hopes it is clear to everyone that people have until June 15 to apply.

She said if everyone thinks they have to come in on Thursday, there will be havoc in the bank's branches.

Mrs. Sherrill Mitchell of Canada Permanent Trust said it is impossible to anticipate how fierce the first week's rush will be, but all the company's part time staff will be put on full-time basis for the first few days.

None of the representative agree with earlier criticism expressed by some bankers that putting the onus on the bank to prove eligibility was unfair.

The application form and required identification are clear, the spokesman said.

The BRIC portfolio is essentially resource-oriented, and includes Canadian Cellulose, Kootenay Forest Product, Plateau Mills, shares in Westcoast Transmission Co. and a gas licence on 2.3 acres of Crown land.

Eligible British Columbians can each buy up to 5,000 additional shares at $6 per share.

Applicants for shares must be 16 years or older, a Canadian citizen or one who has qualified or applied for citizenship, and a resident for the last 12 months.

Parents or legal guardians may apply for free shares on behalf of children.

The shares will be distributed on B.C. Day — Aug. 6. There is no tax payable on the free shares.

However, if an individual sells his shares, he or she may have to pay capital gains tax if the shares rise in value.

If dividends are paid in future, the holder will also be subject to taxation.

Before The Judge

Michael Daniel Wight, 25, of 1201 Stelly's, was jailed for 45 days Tuesday after pleading guilty in provincial court to his sixth conviction for driving while under suspension on Sept. 7.

Crown counsel Richard Law told Judge Blake Allan Wright was convicted on five counts of the same charge July 29, 1976, and did not receive a jail sentence then.

A 19-year-old who pleaded guilty to a Feb. 22 break-in was remanded in custody by Judge Gilbert Hogg until March 21 for a pre-sentence report.

William Robert Penner, no fixed address, admitted breaking into the Executive Shop, 747 Fort, as well as obtaining lodgings at the Yates Hotel, 712 Yates, on Feb. 16 by fraud and false pretences.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the court Penner and some male companions broke into the shop and took a $1,500 worth of confectionery, cigarettes and handbags.

In connection with the hotel charge, Mulligan said, Penner paid a $25.20 bill with a worthless cheque.

The false pretences involved a $52 bad cheque cashed at a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Hogg gave a 25-year-old man a nominal one-day sentence after receiving assurance he will seek help for alcoholism from the Salvation Army.

Monty Rick Jones, 710 Fort, pleaded guilty to shoplifting a pair of $8 sunglasses from Shoppers Drug Mart, 1302 Douglas, last Thursday.

Mulligan said Jones was intoxicated at the time and had been sentenced to four jail terms last year. Jones was given 14 days for common assault March 7, 1978; four months for theft under $200 on March 28; and six months for the same offence on June 27 and Aug. 1.

After hearing from Capt. Harry Hickson that the Salvation Army will help Jones if he volunteered to stay with them, Hogg handed out the one-day sentence and placed him on eight months' probation.

A 48-year-old man who hit a woman because she was nagging him was given a conditional discharge by Hogg and placed on one year's probation.

Neville Bridges, 7193 Hagan Road, was charged with assault causing bodily harm but pleaded guilty to the lesser-included offence of common assault.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Bridges and Patricia Herda were living common-law when they became involved in a domestic dispute Oct. 10. Central Saanich police were called and found the woman bleeding from the mouth. Laughton said both had been drinking.

Judith Kay of the Law Centre, in asking Hogg to grant Bridges an absolute discharge, suggested her client may have been a victim of verbal provocation.

Hogg decided on a conditional discharge but prohibited Bridges from communicating with the complainant during the probation.

Allan told an 18-year-old if he had been employed the fine would have been greater.

Randy Kohne, 1700 Newton, changed his plea to guilty on a charge of causing a disturbance last Halloween.

Law, who withdrew charges of assaulting and obstructing a peace officer, said three auxiliary policemen were called to West Saanich and Prospect Lake roads shortly before 10 p.m. because of a complaint of a disturbance.

As one of the officers approached Kohne, Law said, the accused pushed the offcer backwards with both hands. When handcuffs were being applied, Kohne began punching and kicking police and some of the crowd was interfering with the arrest.

Terry Thomson of the Law Centre said police were unnecessarily rough with Kohne, throwing him to the ground during the handcuffing. She said the officers may have over-reacted to the situation and encouraged Kohne's assault.

Allan rejected Thomson's suggestion of either a discharge or suspended sentence and fined Kohne $200.

Belfast and Bicycles at Belfry

The current Belfry Theatre season will close in mid-April, following a two week run of its forthcoming production Spokesong.

The sentimental and lyrical play about Belfast and bicycles received its world premiere at the John Player Theatre in Dublin in 1975 as part of the Dublin Theatre Festival.

Moved to London's West End, it became a big success there and will open in New York on Thursday at the Circle in the Square Theatre on Broadway.

Belfry has reassembled the team responsible for past musical successes for this play.

Director Don Shipley, designer Ken MacDonald and musical director Joan Beckow whose combined gifts brought Puttin' on the Ritz, Piaf and Dames at Sea to the Belfry stage, will be creating the new production.

Done with Irish wit and enchantment, Spokesong is a celebration of the bicycle. It covers a time span of 100 years and the company is anxious that all stage props be as close to the original as possible.

To this end assistance of the public is sought to help find the following bicycles: a woman's plain black standard bicycle of the 1960s; circa 1895, a woman's safety model with fender; standard black tandem bicycle; Penny Farthing bicycles, large and small; circa 1900 tricycle (adult); an elegant black roadster model; men's military bicycle with crossbar; men's racing model of the 1800s; trick bicycles and period bicycles (the more unusual the better).

Anyone knowing of such bicycles can contact The Belfry at 385-6815.

Spokesong will open March 29 and run through April 14.

Teacher Body To Be Formed

The education ministry will form an advisory committee on teacher certification from the ranks of the teaching profession, a ministry spokesman said Tuesday.

The committee will examine and report on certification programs, advise the ministry on the effectiveness of its certification and decertification policies and make recommendations on specific appeals.

Soviet Fleets 'Threaten West'

Western lines of communication at sea in are seriously threatened by the Soviet Union, Rear-Admiral Michael Martin, commander maritime forces Pacific, said Monday.

The admiral told the Women's Canadian Club the significant factor is that the Soviet Union's navy is in operational control of the Russians' huge fishing and merchant fleets.

"The Russian fishing fleet is the largest in the world with more than 4,000 vessels; a highly efficient operation with fishing trawlers, support ships and transports designed to rape the sea harvest without regard for replenishment."

"Just look what they have done to destroy the bottom fishing industry off the B.C. coast and were about to do on the east coast up until we declared our zone." Martin said.

Russia's large merchant fleet, Martin said, is mostly less than 12 years old and stands sixth in the world in carrying capacity, ahead of the United States, which is eighth.

The vessels have a shallower draught than western ships in order to be able to service undeveloped overseas ports where ships' cargo-handling gear must be used.

Because it is a state-owned merchant marine, it does not belong to merchant conferences that set prices and is in a position to undercut prices of western fleets, the admiral said.

Martin pointed out the Soviet's naval fleet has 357 vessels, compared to the United States' 108.

In a massive building program during the past two years the Soviet Union has commissioned five aircraft carriers, 100 nuclear and 10 diesel submarines, 20 cruisers, 30 destroyers, 60 escort vessels, 46 fast attack ships and 55 amphibious ships.

"These entire Soviet fleets — naval, fishing and merchant — have been built in their own facilities.

The Soviet Union is the world's second largest producer of commercial vessels and the largest producer of military vessels," Martin said.

Free Breast-Check Clinic Set

A free breast self-examination clinic will be held Saturday in the ambulatory care unit at Victoria General Hospital.

The clinic, open to all women, will take place from 9 a.m. until noon and again from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. and is sponsored by the Registered Nurses Association of B.C.

Activities will include a film and informal discussion. Each of the participants will be instructed privately by a nurse how to conduct breast self examinations.

Monthly examinations are essential for early detection of breast cancer and it is important women know how to conduct them, says Heather Clark, a nursing instructor at the University of Victoria.

"It's another health habit, like brushing your teeth," she said.

Most abnormalities, about 85 per cent, are not cancerous, but other medical problems ranging from cysts to benign lumps.

Discovery of a lump usually leads to inactivity because of fear, but early detection means early treatment, Clark stressed.

Breast cancer is the one of the highest causes of death among women and if more of them practised regular self-examination the mortality rate could be reduced, Clark believes.

The self-examination instruction should take about three-quarters of an hour and an appointment should be made by calling Prime Time, 388-6101.

Memorial Rite For Navy Man

A memorial service was held today for Capt. Ronald Jackson, who died March 8 at 79.

Jackson served in the merchant service, the Royal Navy and the Royal Canadian Navy during both world wars, and was founding member of the Naval Officers Association of British Columbia and its Victoria branch.

Jackson, first commanding officer of HMCS Malahat, Victoria's Naval Reserve unit, was Queen's harbor master at Esquimalt, and superintendent of auxiliary vessels at HMC Dockyard.

He was also active with the Company of Master Mariners of Canada, the Maritime Museum of B.C., president of the Malahat Naval Association and a marine consultant for a Vancouver firm.

Seasonal Mall Vehicle Ban Urged

Malls are supposed to be for people not automobiles and Victoria city council will be asked to think about that again by traffic committee chairman Ald. Bill McElroy.

McElroy said Monday he hopes to put a proposal before council next month calling for the temporary closure of the Government Street mall to traffic.

From May 21 to Sept. 3 the mall should be free of automobiles between noon and 4 p.m. and then again from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., said McElroy.

He thinks the street should remain open in the mornings to allow delivery trucks access and then re-open from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. to allow rush hour traffic through. But the rest of the time it should strictly be for people.

The mall was opened five years ago and early proposals that it be restricted to pedestrians most of the time were blocked by merchants.

Shop owners along the mall felt that such a closure would detour business away from their stores.

Pool Facilities Drawing Card At Rec Centre

The new sauna and whirlpool facilities at Saanich's Gordon Head Recreation Centre are providing a healthy boost in attendance figures, according to parks and recreation director Bill Young.

In a report to the parks and recreation committee this week, Young said weekly attendance at the pool during January was up 400 over the weekly figure for the same month last year.

And he attributes this directly to the new facilities.

Young also reported that the new lounge installed in the George Pearkes Arena is proving popular with users, and said there have been no complaints or problems.

It is used as a licensed lounge only on evenings when spectator events are taking place, he noted.

Free access to all municipal recreation facilities will be offered to residents at various times during the week March 26-31, to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the department's recreation facilities division.

During the open-house week there will be demonstrations of the various programs and activities available.

Graving Dock Sewer Job To City Firm

The Victoria company of Futcher and Helgesen Ltd. has been awarded a $144,846 contract to carry out sewer installations at the Esquimalt Graving Dock.

Willis, Cunliffe, Tait and Co. Ltd. prepared the specifications for the contract. The work is to be completed by late May.

Futcher and Helgeson's bid was the lowest of five, the highest bid being $163,022.

MERGER

WHA Makes Plans, NHL Renews Talks

TORONTO (CP) — The National Hockey League has scheduled more merger talks later this month in Chicago, but the World Hockey Association Tuesday announced plans of operation through the 1982-83 season that include expansion to 10 teams and an interlocking schedule with a proposed European division.

WHA president Howard Baldwin told a news conference that NHL president John Ziegler had apprised him that morning of the Chicago meeting on March 22, but in view of recent events WHA owners had determined not stand pat and await another rejection of merger efforts.

The NHL voted at Key Largo, Fla., last week against a merger proposal by a vote of 12 to 5, one less than was necessary to carry the action that would have seen four of six WHA teams join the NHL in time for the 1979-80 season.

Baldwin said following that decision that in future his league would concentrate on bringing a better brand of hockey to its fans and improving the over-all calibre of player as well as declaring open warfare on signing of top calibre junior players.

Although there had been no formal agreement with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, the WHA had gone along with the NHL in not signing players who were still eligible to player junior hockey — players who had not reached their 20th birthday by Dec. 31.

He and several owners decided following the NHL board of governors' meeting in Florida to proceed with plans to operate as a six-team league next season and that future expansion proposals would have to come from the NHL.

However, Frank Griffiths, chairman of the NHL's Vancouver Canucks, implied Monday that merger talks would be revived in "more a matter of days than weeks."

Vancouver, along with Toronto Maple Leafs, Montral Canadiens, Boston Bruins and Los Angeles were the NHL teams that voted against merger at this time.

Subsequently the Winnipeg Tribune launched a campain to protest the NHL's refusal to admit Winnipeg be getting the fans involved by mailing in a coupon — on the front page — which demanded the federal government in Ottawa take steps to end restrictive trade practices and calls on the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to end the NHL's monopoly of television coverage.

Two top officials in Winnipeg for Molson's brewery, which owns Montreal Canadiens, announced the brewery wants to reopen expansion talks.

A change of heart by the two clubs would more than offset opposition from the three remaining NHL teams.

"I informed Mr. Ziegler that I appreciate his continuing efforts and the efforts of the majority of the NHL governors," Baldwin said. "I also told Mr. Ziegler that when and if he has an expansion proposal to present to the WHA, I would be willing to talk with him and bring it up with our six franchises."

Asked his personal feeling of events in the last 24 hours, Baldwin said the Canadian fans "have spoken out; although that's speculation on my part."

The four WHA clubs being considered in expansion talks are Edmonton Oilers, Winnipeg Jets, Quebec Nordiques and New England Whalers. Also to be taken into account would be indemnification to the two teams not included in expansion talks — Birmingham Bulls and Cincinnati Stingers.

Birmingham owner John Bassett has been the exception to the rule where signing of underage players is concerned in recent years. He signed Ken Linseman away from Kingston Canadiens of the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League last year against the advice of his fellow owners and the league.

The WHA, in fact, took the matter to court where a federal judge ruled that to deny Linseman an opportunity to turn pro would be a breach of anti-trust laws.

Bassett signed several other underage players to contracts this year. But he too admits a one-team concept would be best for all concerned.

"If they do (merge), they do. If they don't, they don't. I've always been a proponent of one league for years," said Bassett. "If they do (merge) that's fine by me. If not, then the WHA will carry on."

The meetings here, said Baldwin, confirmed all six teams "are committed to our league" for next season and "I am confident that as a result of our meeting we will be introducing some exciting new concepts that WHA fans will thoroughly enjoy."

The meetings also established three committees — expansion: to explore viable markets in North America during the next 12 months to expand to eight teams by 1980-81 and to 10 by 1982-83; European: to study a European division that would enter the regular WHA schedule for 1980-81; and general managers: to discuss player signings, rule changes and improved scheduling.

Fish Leads World; In Nationals Here

Times News Services

Canada has established itself as the rink to beat at the world junior men's curling championship at Moose Jaw this week and, if the Darren Fish rink of Edmonton can carry on to a successful conclusion, that would be a feather in the cap of the committee for the Pepsi Cola Canadian junior men's championship scheduled for Victoria next week.

That would give the town a world champion to look at in the round-robin tournament opening at Victoria Curling Club, Monday.

The Fish rink of Edmonton knocked off hitherto-unbeaten Andrew McQuistin of Scotland 6-4 in Tuesday afternoon's fourth draw at the world junior and then manhandled West Germany's Roland Jentsch 11-2 in eight ends at night to extend Canada's unbeaten streak to five games.

Barring upsets, all that stands between Fish and a sweep of the round-robin section — good for a bye into the championship game Saturday — is the U.S. rink of Don Barcome. Fish is defending the world title won last year by Paul Gowsell of Calgary, now over-aged.

Canada plays the U.S. in the only morning draw of the the competition today and then meets France in the afternoon.

Sweden upset Barcome 7-6 in an extra end Tuesday, dropping the Americans to a 3-2 record. Warren Hansen of Edmonton, coach of the Canadian rink, said he did not expect Fish to do so well. He said the worst will be over if Fish can get past the Americans.

And just as the dust was just beginning to settle on Monday's accusation by Fish that the Danes had cheated by refusing to admit they'd burned a rock in their game against the Canadians, Fish sparked another minor controversy — this time over his lucky hat.

"This is my lucky hat," said Fish. "Now it's 29-1."

However, Fish covered the Michelin symbol with one of his own which said: "King Fish."

Final Season For Westfall

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Veteran Ed Westfall, New York Islanders' third choice in the 1972 expansion draft, has announced his retirement from the National Hockey League club, effective the end of this season.

Ftorek Sparks Stinger Victory

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati centre Robbie Ftorek, the fifth player in World Hockey Association history to score 100 or more points in four different seasons, chalked up the feat to being an opportunist.

"It's good that Jamie (Hislop) and Reg (Thomas) play so well and let me get some assists," Ftorek said. "When guys compliment one another, it really helps the team and that's what Jamie, Reggie and I do."

The Stingers defeated Edmonton Oilers 5-1 on Tuesday night with Ftorek sparking the victory.

New England Whalers edged Birmingham Bulls 4-3 in the only other WHA game.

Ftorek's tally opened the Stingers' four-goal second period. He then picked up assists on goals by Mike Gartner and Thomas. Peter Marsh's goals in the second and third period tied Ftorek for the team lead with 33, but Ftorek leads the league in assists with 67.

The only other players to score 100 or more points in four WHA seasons are Andre Lacroix of New England, Real Cloutier of Quebec, and Ulf Nilsson and Anders Hedberg, both formerly of Winnipeg and now with New York Rangers of the National Hockey League.

Tallon Jinx Hits Again; Trottier Has Point Lead

BEING PICKED ON was another name for the National Hockey League game between Pittsburgh Penguins and Vancouver Canucks at Vancouver, Tuesday night. While the Penguins were mauling the Canucks 9-3, the Penguin players were rubbing it in with checks like Rod Shutt handed out to Canucks Thomas Gradin on this play as he clears Gradin out from in front of the goal. Things have never gone right for Dale Tallon at the Pacific Coliseum in Vancouver where the breaks have always seemed to go against him.

Tallon, who broke into the National Hockey League with Vancouver nine years ago, suffered his third major injury in the Coliseum, Tuesday, to put a damper on Pittsburgh Penguins' easy 9-3 win over the Canucks before 11,747 fans.

The 28-year-old defenceman crashed into a goal post in the first period while leading a Pittsburgh rush and suffered a compound fracture of his right leg just above the ankle. He was operated on and will be out for the balance of the season.

"This rink has always been bad for me," Tallon told an usher while being wheeled off the ice on a stretcher.

Tallon's luck has been anything but good. He required knee surgery eight years ago when hit by Bob Plager of St. Louis Blues. Four years ago, after being traded to Chicago Black Hawks, Tallon suffered a fractured hip when checked by Mike Robitaille of the Canucks.

Tuesday night he wasn't hit by anyone. He lost his balance while cutting for the Vancouver net and fell heavily into the post and Canuck netminder Gary Bromley. He couldn't get up — and his ninth NHL season was over.

The Penguins put on an awesome offensive display in the first 40 minutes as they scored four goals in the opening period and four more in the second.

Dunc Wilson started in goal for Vancouver and was replaced by Bromley with the score 3-0 as the Canucks lost for the sixth straight game and increased their winless string to nine games.

Vancouver now is a distant second in the Smythe Division and just four points ahead of third-place St. Louis Blues in the fight for a playoff berth.

The Blues and Colorado Rockies tied 5-5 in Denver while New York Islanders trimmed Boston 7-2 at Uniondale, N.Y.

Ross Lonsberry led the Pittsburgh attack with two goals as the Penguins moved into a second-place tie with idle Los Angeles Kings in the Norris Division. Rod Schutt, Peter Lee, Greg Malone, Rick Kehoe, George Ferguson, Gregg Sheppard and Gary McAdam also scored for the winners.

The Canucks got third-period goals from Don Lever, rookie Curt Fraser and Brad Gassoff as they were outshot 40-26 by the fast-skating Penguins.

"This is the first time we've had an easy win on the road this season," said general manager Baz Bastien of the Penguins. "Most of our road wins are a struggle."

"We're a frustrated hockey team," said coach Harry Neale of the Canucks. "The guys are working hard, but the goals just aren't there.

In Uniondale, Bryan Trottier of the Islanders had four assists to pull into the NHL scoring lead with 40 goals and 70 assists, giving him two points more than Montreal's Guy Lafleur.

The Bruins, who got two goals from Wayne Cashman, never had a chance.

Mike Kaszycki started the Islanders' scoring parade at 6:01 with the first of his two goals. Then Mike Bossy scored his 55th of the year on the first of four assists by Trottier. Later Bossy got two more and now has 57 for the season.

Before the game, the Islanders' Ed Westfall — completing his 18th NHL season — announced he will retire after the playoffs and accept a team vice-presidency in public relations. The 38-year-old Westfall, who played 11 seasons with the Bruins, was the third player picked by the Islanders in the 1972 expansion draft.

Merlin Malinowski's goal with 5:50 remaining capped Colorado's three-goal third-period comeback and helped the Rockies tie the Blues. St. Louis got goals from Wayne Babych, Bob Murdoch and Brian Sutter in a 2:13 span earlier in the period.

Flames Include Captain In Five-for-Three Trade

ATLANTA (AP) — Atlanta Flames have dispatched team captain and all-time top scorer Tom Lysiak with four other players to Chicago in return for three Black Hawks.

Centre Ivan Boldirev, 29, defenceman Phil Russell, 26, and left winger Darcy Rota, 26, are the three players headed for Atlanta in the deal completed Tuesday after 2½ months of trade talks between the National Hockey League teams.

Lysiak, 25, is the oldest of the five players Atlanta gave up. The others were left winger Harold Phillipoff, 22, and defencemen Pat Ribble, 24, Greg Fox, 25, and Miles Zaharko, 21.

"I was shocked," Boldirev said. "I've done everything they've asked me to do here, including keeping my mouth shut. Maybe I should have said more."

"When you get down to it, I think it was a decision between winning and building," Lysiak said. "The Flames felt they had to win right away. Maybe they took a shot in the dark with this one. I know I never asked to be traded."

Atlanta general manager Cliff Fletcher's analysis was different.

"We're not concerned with the short-term effects," he said. "We're concerned with how it will help our club in the long run. And we think it will help tremendously."

"Boldirev is one of the really top scorers in the league and Russell is the kind of defenceman that we have needed to consistently compete with the premier teams in the NHL."

"In those two we're getting Chicago's two best players. To accomplish that, we could not do it without giving up a quality player in return. They are getting that in Tom Lysiak."

Chicago coach Bobby Pulford said: "We thought we had to add some muscle. We think we did that with the players we got." None of the five players going to Chicago weighs less than 195 pounds.

Lysiak has 23 goals and 35 assists in 52 games this year. He recently returned to action after missing 15 games with a pulled groin muscle.

Boldirev has 29 goals and 35 assists and has scored 24 or more goals in five consecutive seasons.

Rota, like Lysiak a first-round draft pick in 1973, has 13 goals and 17 assists. Russell has eight goals and 23 assists.

Phillipoff has nine goals and 17 assists this season. Ribble has five goals and 16 assists. Fox has 12 assists and no goals. Zaharko played most of last season with the Flames, but spent this year with Tulsa, Atlanta's minor league farm team.

Blades Make Habit Of Furious Finishes

A couple of nights ago, the Blades, playing at home, struck for five goals in the third period to beat Edmonton Oil Kings, 10-4.

On Tuesday night they pulled the same caper to whip Regina Pats by the same score in one of two Western Hockey League games.

In the other contest, Medicine Hat Tigers scored four first-period goals and held on to defeat visiting Calgary Wranglers, 6-3.

Defeat in the penalty-filled clash before 1,906 spectators in Saskatoon put in a crimp in the Pats' attempt to catch the Oil Kings for the third and last playoff berth in the Eastern Division. Regina is three points behind, but has five games left compared with Edmonton's four.

Pat Conacher scored three goals and collected three assists for the Blades.

Bill MacNaught and Dan Erickson each had two goals while Kelly Kuspira, Lorne Bokshowan and Glen Ganchar had single markers for the Blades, who outshot the Pats 49-20.

Meanwhile, Victoria Cougars have acquired the services of three players from Nanaimo Clippers, who were eliminated from the B.C. Junior Hockey League playoffs Tuesday night at Nanaimo.

In addition to defencemen Ryan McAdams and Len Dawes, Victoria manager-coach Jack Shupe will bring up Brent Denat, an 18-year-old Victoria product.

All three players will be in the lineup when the Cats face Lethbridge Broncos at 8 p.m. Thursday in Memorial Arena.

Leafs Trade For Gardner To Boost Scoring Punch

TORONTO (CP) — Toronto Maple Leafs have traded for extra scoring punch in their battle for second place in the National Hockey League's Adams Division by giving up a pair of little-used players in return for Colorado Rockies' second-leading scorer.

Centre Paul Gardner, who has had two 30-goal seasons but recently has seen little playing time in Colorado, now will wear a Toronto uniform after being Colorado's top draft choice in 1976.

In exchange, Colorado acquired defenceman Trevor Johansen from the Leafs' New Brunswick American Hockey League farm club and centre Don Ashby, who had retired after being sent down to New Brunswick early in the season.

Gardner, 23, had 30 goals as a rookie during the 1976-77 season and followed that up with 30 goals in the first 40 games during the 77-78 season before suffering a spinal problem.

This season he has 23 goals and 26 assists, but has seen limited action lately as Rockies' coach Aldo Guidolin juggled his line-up in a bid to improve the Rockies' sagging fortunes. Jack Valiquette leads Colorado in scoring with 23 goals and 30 assists.

"I wasn't playing here at all, just the odd shift." the former Toronto Marlboro junior said. "It got frustrating. One day I walked in and asked Aldo to trade me."

Ashby, 23, had 19 goals for Toronto during his 76-77 season after being Toronto's No. 1 draft pick in 1975.

Johansen, 22, was Toronto's No. 1 draft choice in 1977 and was a regular during his rookie season. But he lost his spot to another rookie, Joel Quenneville, and had one goal and four assists in 40 games with the Leafs before being assigned to New Brunswick.

Island Wolf Population Exploding in Some Areas

Three Vancouver Island outdoors groups — Nanaimo and District Fish and Game Protective Association, Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association and the Amalgamated Conservation Society — are calling on Environment Minister Rafe Mair to fund a study into a developing wolf problem on Vancouver Island.

When the wolf was in danger of being exterminated on the Island, the B.C. Wildlife Federation clubs lobbied to have them declared an endangered species.

"As a result of our efforts, predator hunting of Vancouver Island wolves was eliminated and they were placed on the protected list.

"Since that time, this wolf population has literally exploded to the point where it is now having a very real and dramatic impact on ungulate populations in several watersheds," states a brief from the Nanaimo club.

The clubs all say observations by hunters last fall indicate there is a cause for concern in some watersheds for both deer and elk populations, which have decreased in direct ratio to the increased sightings of wolves despite good survival by prey species over the winter.

"While observations by laymen in the field can indicate the existence of a problem, it requires an in-depth inventory by competent wildlife biologists to determine the extent and the impact of any imbalance in predator/prey relationships," said the brief.

They add this proper documentation is needed to determine whether or not this imbalance is serious enough to warrent a management program "that would produce the proper balance of Vancouver Island wildlife populations."

"The abundance of both predator and prey would eventually stabilize in time without a management program given a stable environment. However, we do not have a stable environment on Vancouver Island because of our own presence and because of a wide variability of winter weather conditions.

"Both of these factors can amplify the fluctuations in predator/prey abundance. Because of man's activities (such as the destruction of ungulate winter range through logging) combined with periodic winters of high snowfall, recovery of both predator and prey populations from periods of low abundance can take an extremely long period of time and is by no means assured."

The brief concludes:

"The obvious solution for the benefit of both wildlife and man is a properly conducted and integrated management program.

"We are already attempting to manage deer and elk on Vancouver Island. It is ridiculous to think we can ignore other vital segments of this ecosystem such as habitat and predators."

Man, through his various activities, has interferred with a delicate balance.

Now we have an obligation to spend a little extra cash in order to make certain the balance is restored and maintained.

Gerry Barnhart of Reelfish Enterprizes is striking it lucky on his steelheading trips these days, thanks mainly to the new neutral buoyancy "Flashback" plug which should be available in Victoria by mid-April . . . The plug, weightless in fresh water, takes steelhead, trout and both chinook and coho salmon . . .. The three-inch (a five-inch model is in the works) plug, which dives because of the shape of its spoon bill rather than being heavier than water, has an adjustable action and will be available in one color combination — blue and silver over white.

Highlanders School Hoop Choice

VANCOUVER (CP) — West Vancouver Highlanders have been established as favorites in the annual British Columbia high school boys AA basketball championships which begins today at the Pacific Coliseum.

Coaches who vote in a provincial poll have rated West Vancouver in second place most of the season, behind Delta Pacers. The Highlanders moved up, however, when they won the Howe Sound zone tournament and Delta finished third in the Fraser Valley playoffs.

"We've been second all year, so the poll hasn't made much difference to the kids," says coach Brian Upson of the Highlanders. "But I'm happy to be ranked No. 1 now that the tournament is here."

Other games today: Parkland of Victoria against Cranbrook, Burnaby South against Terrace, KLO of Kelowna against Mennonite Educational Institute, Magee of Vancouver against defending-champion Nanaimo, Mission against Gladstone of Vancouver, Penticton against Delta and Richmond against Mount Douglas of Victoria.

Upson said Duchess Park has a team featuring many players from the school's 1978 B.C. junior high championship team.

"Duchess Park seems to have some good talent," he said. "They play similar to us . . . they like to run, get the ball around well and shoot it up.

"They'll probably be quite a bit bigger than us."

The Highlanders don't have much size outside of forwards Doug Vicic (six-foot-two) and Andy Lockhart (six-foot-one). Both have rebounded well this season, said Upson, and West Vancouver has blocked out well on the boards.

Vicic has averaged 26 points a game this season and Lockhart has added another 18 points a game.

West Vancouver also has good ball-handling guards in starters Jeff Pasternak and Ed Mitchell, said the coach, with Lance Cook coming off the bench as a valuable sixth man.

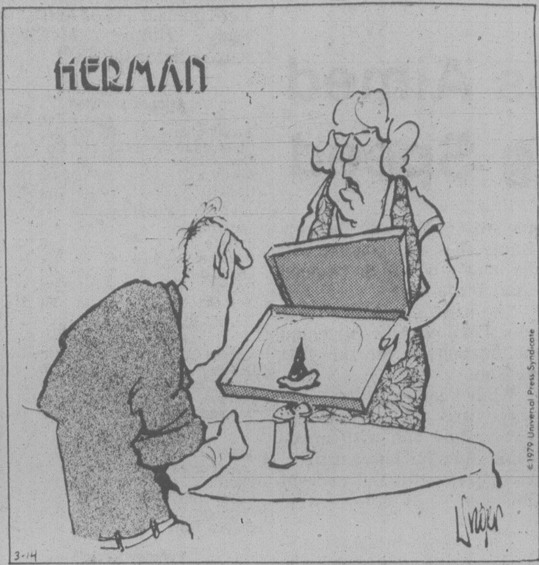
Upson said consistency will be the key in the championship tournament, which has six genuine contenders in the 16 entrants.

"We've been fairly consistent this season," he added. "We didn't have a bad stretch.

"Some games weren't as inspiring as others, but you don't want them (the players) high all the time.

"I don't think we've reached our peak yet."

The championship game will be played Saturday night in the 15,600-seat Coliseum.



"D'you want that piece of pizza you didn't eat last week?"

Coaching Madness Differs

By Associated Press

There is a method to Red Holzman's madness. With Kevin Loughery, it seems to be the other way around.

Holzman, coach of the New York Knicks, has torn his team apart and put it back together again this year, trying to reshape it into the kind of squad which won two National Basketball Association championships during his first tenure as coach.

"Red Holzman has a concept, a goal, a method of play that's consistent," said Sonny Werblin, the president of Madison Square Garden, which owns the Knicks. "He's a well-organized man. Now, we're going to try and put character in the Knicks. The players have to have pride in themselves and learn to play with each other. And to be unselfish. This isn't tennis or golf. Those are games for individual play."

For a while Tuesday night, Holzman couldn't convey his concept of organization to his Knicks. In the third quarter, New Orleans Jazz, the worst team in the NBA, sliced New York's lead from 24 to six points.

"We started standing around," said Holzman. "But in the fourth quarter we got things together again." When they did, they ran off to a 104-91 victory.

Loughery, meanwhile, did what he does best as coach of the New Jersey Nets. He got two more technical fouls — that's 38 this season. He ran on to the court to get at referee Bernie Fryer and got run out of another game.

And the Chicago Bulls, trailing by as many as 17 points, caught the Nets and beat them, 105-102.

In other NBA matches, Indiana beat Detroit 122-120 in overtime, Portland downed Atlanta 103-82, Washington defeated Los Angeles 120-111 and Phoenix nipped Cleveland, 124-120.

Toby Knight's 21 points paced the Knicks, who handed New Orleans its fifth straight defeat. Ray Williams, a reserve guard, scored 14 of his 17 points in the second period when New York opened a 60-42 halftime lead. Jimmy McElroy scored 28 for the Jazz.

New Rules Aimed At Cutting Speed

PARIS (AP) — The International Auto Sport Federation (FISA) has announced first tentative steps aimed at cutting back the dangerous increase in the speed of Grand Prix race cars.

Drivers and builders of the world championship cars have joined the group recently in expressing concern over the latest generation of ground-hugging racers, based on the Lotus 79 design in which Mario Andretti of the United States swept to the world driving title last year.

The cars dramatically are faster through corners, exposing their drivers to high physical strain and the certainty that an accident will be at a much higher speed than in the past.

The FISA says rules for a new Formula One car could be introduced for the 1981 season.

While keeping to the same three-litre engine size, the cars would run with maximum 16-inch wide rear tires, compared with the current monster 21-inch wide covers.

They would be heavier — 1,375 pounds against the current 1,265-pound minimum — shorter, narrower and lower, and carry more front-end protection.

Vitally, there would be a complete ban on "skirts." These are the flexible strips between the bottom of the body and the ground, which in the latest designs allow a low pressure air zone under the car, "glueing" it to the track through the corners.

There were reports in racing circles that the suggestions met with instant opposition from tire manufacturers.

They were reported to feel strongly that reducing tire sizes, without running smaller and thus less powerful engines than the current 500-horsepower units, would lead to more, rather than less-dangerous race cars.

The FISA statement said only that smaller engines might be considered at a later stage.

Carbo Signed By Cardinals

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Free agent Bernie Carbo has been signed to a two-year contract by St. Louis Cardinals, the veteran outfielder's second tour of duty with the National League baseball club.

The Cardinals have also signed another free agent, lefthanded reliever Darold Knowles.

Some Evidence Of Improvement

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Injured Italian skier Leonardo David shows some evidence of neurological improvement, says a spokesman at the Medical Centre Hospital.

David, 19, injured on March 3 at a World Cup ski race at Lake Placid, N.Y., has been comatose after suffering brain damage in a fall.

Cup Dreams Shattered

LONDON (Reuter) — Wolverhampton Wanderers shattered the Wembley dreams of tiny third division club Shrewsbury Tuesday, beating it 3-1 in the English Football Association (FA) Cup quarter-final replay.

Shrewsbury did all the hard work last Saturday, drawing 1-1 to Wolverhampton, but the first division club turned on extra power in the replay with goals from Willie Carr, Bill Rafferty and a Peter Daniel penalty.

Wolverhampton, which last won the FA Cup 19 years ago, will meet either Arsenal or Southampton in the semi-finals.

Liverpool, already through to the last four, continued its relentless pursuit of the first division title with a 1-1 home draw against second-placed city rivals Everton.

Earlier in the season Everton beat Liverpool 1-0 and desperately needed another victory Tuesday, but it was Liverpool that took the lead through Scotland's Kenny Dalglish — his 17th goal.

Everton fought back bravely with a tieing goal from Andy King, but the draw leaves them two points behind Liverpool, which has played three games less.

Sun Belt Loses Monopoly; Super Bowl Will Go Silver

HONOLULU (AP) — The sun belt no longer holds exclusive possession of football's Super Bowl after a decision by National Football League owners to send their premier game to the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., on Jan. 24, 1982.

It came as no surprise that the 1981 game will be held in New Orleans on Jan. 25, marking the fifth time the Super Bowl has gone to the crescent city.

The owners also awarded the Jan. 30, 1983, game to Pasadena's Rose Bowl in California, which also holds the 1980 contest next Jan 20.

The granting of the 1982 Super Bowl to Pontiac opened the way for other northern cities and Hartly Kruger, of the unsuccessful Seattle group, said: "We are very encouraged by the action favoring Pontiac. By 1984, we'll have our housing situation well in hand."

New Orleans gets Super Bowl XV, the 15th in the series which has been limited previously to Miami, Southern California and Louisiana.

The decision on sites for the next three Super Bowls cut out Miami, which held the 1979 game. Joe Robbie, managing general partner of the Miami Dolphins who is involved in a dispute with the Orange Bowl over contracts, did not endorse the Miami bid for one of the next three dates.

THE CANADIAN SCOTTISH REGIMENT (PRINCESS MARY'S)

"If you want a dull, routine job, we are not interested in you. However, if you like challenging, exciting work like firing automatic weapons, throwing grenades, helicopter training, rappeling, mountaineering and more, then you may be just who we are looking for. Join the Canadian Scottish Regiment; try the infantry, you'll like it.

If you are male, 17 or older and physically fit, we want you. Come and ask some questions about serving in Canada's citizen army — The Militia. The work is part time, with some opportunity for full time employment. We're at the Bay Street Armoury on Thursday and Tuesday evenings from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. Ask for the Canadian Scottish Regiment."

Austin on Top

LLOYDMINSTER, Sask. (CP) — There was a three-way tie for the lead after four rounds of the Royal Canadian Legion Dominion curling championship Tuesday.

British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Quebec each won three and lost one.

Manitoba, Ontario, Alberta, New Brunswick and Newfoundland are second in the competition, with 2-and-2 won-lost records. Prince Edward Island is at 1-3 and Nova Scotia is alone with a 0-4 record.

Dick Austin's Victoria rink lost its first game of the round-robin event 9-8 to Alberta's Ray Stanfield of Edmonton.

Quebec took a 10-2 fourth-round victory over Manitoba-Northwestern Ontario, skipped by Robert Kosloski of Thunder Bay.

In other fourth-round games, Doug Huff of Gander, Nfld., edged Bill Jenkins of Charlottetown 9-7 and New Brunswick's Steve Adams of Newcastle stopped Ontario's Andy Anderson of Carp 8-3.

Braves Get Berth In Island Final

Saanich Braves added the Patterson Division playoff title to regular-season laurels in the South Vancouver Island Junior "B" Hockey League by edging Juan de Fuca Gulls 5-4 in an overtime goaltending struggle Tuesday night at Pearkes Arena.

Tom King scored his second goal of the game 40 seconds into overtime to give Braves a 4-1 decision in the best-of-seven series and a berth in the Island championship against defending-champion Port Alberni Timbermen later this month.

Saanich held the crown in 1976 and 1977.

Play was even through the entire game with the score deadlocked 2-2 after the first period, 3-3 after the second and 4-4 at the end of regulation time.

Stevenson Rink Wins

Ralph Stevenson skipped his Glen Meadows rink to victory over Gordie Walker of the host Victoria Curling Club in the final of the Pacific Coast Senior Curling Association's Zone I championship at the weekend.

The Glen Meadows quartet also became the first winners of the Gordie Moore Memorial Trophy.

Stevenson, Ralph Moxie, Wilkie Gardner and Lloyd Clarke now advance to the PCSCA finals on March 23-24 at Duncan and the British Columbia playdowns March 25-28 in Qualicum.

Jets Take Midget Title

NANAIMO — Strong two-way performances by Patti Begg and Suzie King helped give Victoria Jets the British Columbia midget girls' basketball championship in a tournament here at the weekend.

In earlier games, Jets defeated Cordova Bay 34-16 and Duncan, 32-25.

Three of the Jets — King, Lora Larson and Laurie Sawyer — were named to the all-star team.

'Hurricane' Melo Devastates Leclair

MONTREAL (CP) — Eddy Melo of Toronto moved his professional record to 12 victories and no losses when he scored a devastating first-round knockout of Jean-Claude Leclair of Montreal in the main event of a five-fight boxing card at the Paul Sauve Arena Tuesday night.

Jutras stopped the fight at 46 seconds.

Melo, 18, acquired the nickname Hurricane because of the speed with which he disposed of most of his opponents. The knockout over Leclair was the 10th KO for the Toronto boxer in his 12 victories.

Leclair, 23, now has a record of 42 victories, six losses and one draw in 49 fights.

Laver Heads Legends List

ATLANTA (AP) — Rod Laver, one of only two men to win the Grand Slam in tennis history, heads a field of eight players for the $25,000 Tennis Legends Championship March 22-24 at the Georgia Tech Coliseum.

The Atlanta tournament, first stop on the newly created tour, features tennis players over 35 competing in singles and doubles events.

Laver, who won his first Grand Slam (Wimbledon, U.S. Open, Australian Open and the French Open) in 1962 and did it again in 1969, and Don Budge are the only two men to capture all four titles in the same year.

Laver will be joined in Atlanta by Ken Rosewall, Roy Emerson, Fred Stolle, Cliff Drysdale, Frew McMillan, Charlie Pasarell and Roger Taylor.

Blight Returning To Canuck Lineup

VANCOUVER (CP) - Right winger Rick Blight has been recalled by Vancouver Canucks and will rejoin the National Hockey League team Thursday for a game in Buffalo against the Sabres.

Blight was sent to Dallas Black Hawks of the Central Hockey League three weeks ago and, in 15 games, had eight goals and seven assists.

The fourth-year pro had only five goals and 10 assists in 46 games with the Canucks earlier in the season.

Blight had never scored fewer than 25 goals a season in three previous NHL seasons, but suffered a knee injury in training camp and didn't gain a regular spot in the Vancouver lineup under new coach Harry Neale.

Bill, Evie Lead Fivepin Squads

Bill Cool and Evie Weinberger will lead seven men and seven women into the 18th annual Senior Pacific Coast fivepin bowling championships starting Monday at Middlegate Lanes in Burnaby.

Cool and Weinberger became the Victoria City singles champions during trials at Town and Country and Mayfair lanes at the weekend to determine a capital city representative squad for the Pacific Coast rolloffs.

Cool led the men qualifiers with a 16-game total of 4,204 and was followed by Jack Scott (4,188), Wayne Hendry (4,102), Fred Hickey (4,019), Don Brown (3,978), Mark Roberts (3,915) and King Lee (3,897).

Weinberger topped the women with 3,962 and was followed by Sandy McNeil (3,902), Marg Vickery (3,891), Dorothy Krimmer (3,794), Theresa Stone (3,733), Barbara Hyde (3,579) and June Peddlesden (3,468).

Although he didn't make the qualifying list, Bill Hammond managed to gain a share of the spotlight by coming up with red-hot 416 game at Town and Country.

New Alouette

MONTREAL (CP) — Larry Pfohl, a six-foot-three, 252-pound offensive tackle from the University of Miami, has signed a Canadian Football League contract with Montreal Alouettes.

Soviet Skaters Face Title Threat

VIENNA (CP) — The Soviet Union's domination of the world pairs figure skating title has been threatened for the first time in 14 years.

The absence this year of perennial champions Irina Rodnina and Alexander Zaitsev left the field open and Americans Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner took advantage by grabbing the lead in Tuesday's short program.

Barbara Underhill of Oshawa, Ont., and Paul Martini of Woodbridge, Ont., in their first world senior championship, were in 10th spot going into tonight's pairs free skating final which accounts for the final 75 per cent of the marks.

In the only other event on Tuesday's opening program, East Germany's Jan Hoffmann took the lead after the men's compulsory figures. He was followed by Vladimir Kovalev of the Soviet Union, David Santee of the United States and defending world champion Charles Tickner of the U.S.

Brian Pockar of Calgary placed 14th in the figures and Vern Taylor of Toronto was 20th in a field of 22 skaters.

Babilonia and Gardner, bronze medallist the last two years, carry a slim lead over the Soviet Union pair of Marina Cherkasova and Sergei Shahrai going into tonight's final.

The Americans scored 15 ordinals and 40.84 points while the Russian pair had 16 ordinals and 40.72 points. Ordinals represent the placings of the nine judges.

The Soviet Union has held the pairs crown since 1965 when Ljudmila Belousova and Oleg Protopopov took their first of four. Then Rodnina, paired with Alexei Ulanov won four more before changing partners and winning another six with Alexander Zaitsev.

Rodnina was on the sidelines this year after giving birth to her first child two weeks ago.

The Canadian pair of Underhill and Martini appeared set to achieve their goal of finishing in the top 10 in their first senior championships.

They could have been higher than 10th if Martini had not slipped on his double-loop jump.

"I hope our little slips are out of our system now," said Martini. "Going out there for the first time in your first worlds, it's like something you haven't done before.

Both Martini and Underhill, who competed in other international senior events since winning the world junior championships last year, admitted that they were still nervous about coming here despite their previous experience.

"It's the big leagues," said Martini. "It's a completely different atmosphere."

In the men's figures, Tickner, the 1978 champion, had a bad third figure and wound up in fourth spot which could give him trouble. He only barely beat Hoffman for the title last year after coming from third in figures.

He will need a strong short program today and a flawless free skating performance Thursday to pull up for the gold medal.

Also facing a long haul are Pockar and Taylor who both slipped from their 1978 placings in figures. Pockar, 19, was 12th after figures last year and pulled up to 10th over all with his free skating. Taylor, was 15th in the figures section last year and pulled up to 12th over-all.

The drop was all the more disappointing because both Canadian skaters improved their performances in the figures but found that the other top skaters and apparently improved even more.

Pockar, at least was not dismayed by the results.

"I was happy with the figures I put down," said the Canadian men's champion.

Rod Carew: Is He Worth Five Games The Angels Were Short Last Year?

By SHIRLEY POVICH
The Washington Post

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — In this era of monstrous baseball salaries, the man who is actually the highest-paid player in the whole profession gets $800,000 a season, cash on the barrel head every two weeks.

No write-ins like deferred payments, or hidden bonus clauses or late-maturing insurance policies, Yankee style. But a straight $4 million wage for his next five years on Gene Autry's payroll as requested by the payee, who likes simple arrangements.

Autry is paying this kind of money to Rodney Cline Carew, a chap who conforms to none of the usual big-contract types. He is not a big, blow-'em-down pitcher, nor does he hit home runs.

As for showmanship, he regards it as poor taste. As for his hitting, ah, that could be called his highly-negotiable saving grace. Rod Carew has been the best hitter in the whole world for the last many years, seven times the American League batting champion. He also owns a deft first baseman's glove, and last fall when he opted off the Minnesota Twins, his bat instantly became the most sought-after weapon in baseball.

Autry won the bidding contest, and Carew landed on the side of the Angels.

Gene Autry has long been able to afford the baseball stars he chose to collect. Neither Caruso nor Sinatra sang for his supper as profitably as did Autry, the vocalizing cowboy who was discovered by Will Rogers in a Chelsea, Okla., railroad station where he was a relief telegraph operator.

"That your guitar standing there?" Rogers asked the young telegrapher. "Yup," Autry said. "I sing with it," He turned in a couple of songs for Rogers, who said, "Boy, you ought to go on the radio," and helped arrange it. Out of it all came "Back in the Saddle Again," "My Silver Haired Daddy," and later, "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer," which sold a mere 11 million records.

Autry is now a conglomerate and if not the richest owner in baseball he's close to it. And the most unintimidated. After spending $12 million for free agents in recent years and failing to come close to a pennant, he now is sending in all those chips for Carew.

What the Angels got in addition to the most feared of all batsmen was the most quiet of all baseball's millionaires. Carew's manner is as modulated as the calmness of his voice. On the Twins, he was everybody's modest nice guy. These days in the Angels' clubhouse, their new $4 million man manages to make himself only part of the scenery.

The big stick that the quiet man has carried to the plate in his 12 years in the majors has fetched him a .334 lifetime average, including, of course, that gorgeous .388 in 1977 when he took a big run at the long-unreached .400 plateau.

In February, when Carew reported to the Angels, Arthur Patterson, a team executive, was dismayed at what he seemed to note as a lack of cooperation in community affairs by their new star.

"I asked Carew if he would accept the honorary chairmanship of our Orange County Cancer Society and he did not seem eager to do it. We counted on Carew's name and here was a fellow who apparently wan't interested in this kind of work," Patterson said.

"I was explaining the work of the Cancer Society to Carew and he seemed to stammer. Finally he said, 'I know about that. I'm the honorary chairman of the Minnesota Cancer Society'." Carew said he was wondering if it would interfere with his work for the Minnesota people.

The Angels already are showing a profit on Carew. The demand for season tickets was so great when his acquisition was announced that the Angels notified their fans by city-wide radio that the advance sales offices also would be open on Sunday. They believe Carew is responsible for increased sales of 3,000 season tickets, which at $350 each add up to a $1,050,000 boost in revenue before their new man picks up a bat in regular-season play.

For Manage[illegible]im Fregosi, having Carew is a heady thing. "We finished only five games from the playoffs last season, and if Rod Carew isn't worth many more than five games to this club we should give up right now."

There's been nothing like Carew on the Angels, Fregosi said. "What an attitude. He's up at 6 o'clock every morning, running for miles on the golf course next to our motel and taking six or seven of our guys with him."

Fregosi said Carew gave the whole team a lift simply by the act of signing with the Angels. "That means he selected us over the Yankees and all the other teams. What a dream hitter he is. And hitting is contagious you know. He just glides with the pitch. And I also happen to think he's the best first basemen in the league."

If the baseball world at large was still wondering last summer about the skills of the man who hit that .388 in 1977, Carew offered testimony for himself in the 1978 All-Star game. First time up, and on national television, he tripled. Second time up, he tripled, and rested his case.

Carew said he never intended to sign with a National League team, for the same reason Pete Rose didn't sign with an American League team. "I didn't want to be a stranger to the league's pitching," he said. "I studied AL pitching for too many years."

But he did not shop around like Rose, who shuttled among several cities searching out the best offer. "I don't like to do things like that," Carew said, simply. "I always had an idea I'd like to sign with the Angels."

It was Carew's reluctance to string things out that caused his brother-in-law, his agent, to issue a sort of deadline to the Yankees, who were talking trade with Calvin Griffith, owner of the Twins. This infuriated Yankee owner George Steinbrenner, who declared nobody could issue a deadline to his club, and said, "Any player who doesn't consider it a privilege to play with the Yankees is of no interest to me."

Carew said, "I simply didn't consider it a privilege to play with the Yankees. I consider it a privilege to play major league baseball with any team I like to play with."

Last year there was that brush with Griffith, who made those remarks about blacks at a civic club luncheon and said, "Anyway, blacks don't buy tickets to ball games."

Carew said, "Sure, I was indignant and I did call Griffith a bigot, and I said I wouldn't play for any plantation owner. But later I realized that Mr. Griffith had always been a very nice person before that and I didn't want to bad-name him."

The Twins weren't very sure about Carew as a hitter when they brought him up from the minors in 1967, Carew said, "I remember one of the men in the Twins' organization saying to me, 'Rod, if you can hit .240 or .250 and play some second base you will be a help to us." Carew hit .292 that first year.

Fregosi is still curious as to why the Twins batted Carew in the No. 2 spot, and often as leadoff all those years. He's batting Crew third, "where he belongs."

Carew said, "I guess, I'll have to adjust to a couple of things now that I'm with the Angels," inviting the question with some delight. "Well," he explained, "I'll have to abandon my Nolan Ryan stance." He said that against Ryan he would get down as low as he decently could and try to move up on Ryan's rising fast ball.

He adjusts, too, to hardball throwers like Ron Guidry and Jim Palmer, he says. "I shift around to my extreme open stance. It's the only way to pick up the kind of fast ball they throw."

Carew is big enough to hit the home runs he doesn't go for. "I'd rather meet the ball more than the big sluggers do. Things happen when you meet the ball, outside of the good feeling you get. Late last season, I pulled a nice double into right field and I knew it would be a triple because the grass was wet out there and it would take longer to get to the right fielder. In this game, you have to study the climate, too." It was the nearest thing to a Carew boast.

Rod Carew: Studies the climate too

Selected for Hall

DETROIT (AP) — Jimmy Hines, former Olympic 100-metre champion and the world record-holder for that distance, is among nine track and field athletes and coaches selected for induction this summer into the National Track and Field Hall of Fame at Charlestown, W.Va.

Also selected are former Olympic decathlon champion James Bausch, track and field pioneer William Curtis, long-time Kansas State coach Ward Haylett, ex-Olympic shot put and discus champion Clarence (Bud) Houser, former Olympic discus medallist Fortune Gordien, Drake Relays founder Major John Griffith, Olympic long jump gold medallist William De-Hart Hubbard and women's Olympic sprint champion Edith McGuire.

Senate Backs Tax Dodge

OTTAWA (CP) — The Senate banking committee has recommended that the government unplug a tax loophole it plugged last fall and let such professionals as doctors and athletes benefit from favorable small business taxation.

The report of the committee says the action announced in Finance Minister Jean Chretien's budget in November is unsatisfactory and discriminatory.

The report was tabled in the Senate by chairman Salter Hayden of Ontario Tuesday night.

Depending on their income, small business pay corporation taxes of 10 per cent or 15 per cent. Large corporations pay 30 per cent or 36 per cent.

Over the years some doctors, dentists, lawyers, athletes, entertainers, and other professionals have created corporations to provide their services to the public. The favorable small business tax, designed to help expand these businesses, was less than individual income tax.

The government said in November the growing practice gave unfair advantage to those professionals in comparison to wage earners.

As a result of the budget the government issued draft regulations specifically excluding accountants dentists, lawyers and doctors from the small business tax.

It made some general provisions under which other professionals are excluded.

The Senate report said the government is being arbitrary and discriminatory.

Big Fire in St. John's

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Firemen continued this morning to hose down the smoking remains of an entire city block where four businesses and six apartments were destroyed Tuesday night in one of the worst recent fires in this old port city.

There were no serious injuries, although officials said some firemen suffered minor ones. About 50 firemen from three stations fought the fire.

B.C. MP Raises Apartheid Fears

OTTAWA (CP) — Indian Affairs Minister Hugh Faulkner may be encouraging South African-type apartheid and building a time bomb by proposing that Indian tribal governments control affairs on their reserves, Conservative MPs said Tuesday.

While admitting the example of South African racial problems was extreme, Frank Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) told the Commons Indian affairs committee that tensions have been created in Canada, and particularly Quebec, by giving cultural jurisdiction to regions of the country.

"If we were functionally bilingual there would be no problems," said the British Columbian MP.

And Conservative MP Doug Neil from the Saskatchewan riding of Moose Jaw said that "setting native people apart would create more problems than we already have."

Faulkner countered that giving Indians control of their own affairs with respect to education, socio-economic development and government would not lead to "an estrangement of Indian people" with the rest of the country.

Indians are and would be free to move on and off reserves and retain their freedom to choose career options, Faulkner said.

"By strengthening their sense of identity Indians will relate to Canadians from a position of strength."

Oberle replied: "That sounds good from a social engineering point of view but look what happened in Quebec."

The exchange took place as MPs questioned Faulkner on his proposals to revise the Indian Act, which spells out how the country's 300,000 status Indians are to be governed.

More than 15,000 northern Inuit and about 750,000 Metis and non-status Indians are not covered by the legislation.

The Indian Act is more than 100 years old and has not been substantially revised since 1951. Most observers agree that many sections are badly outdated.

Faulkner's proposals include broadening legal powers of Indian band councils, providing a charter by which power and responsibility would be transferred or delegated to bands, Indian control over education and recognition of Indian languages for elementary school instruction, band control of surrendered land for development purposes and protection for members on an equal basis.

Faukner said these proposals are not "cut in stone" and more discussion is required to determine the proper course.

Discussions between the National Indian Brotherhood and a special cabinet committee on revision began in 1974 but ended abruptly last year when Indian officials pulled out.

Ontario To Curb Herbicides

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario environment ministry will move to restrict the use of two herbicides recently banned in the United States.

A ministry official said today herbicides 2,4,5-T and 2,4,5-TP, vegetation control chemicals, are used on rights of way of highways and utility lines.

A regulation under the Pesticides Act, which would require permits for use of the herbicides, likely will be in effect in the next few days, the official said.

While the regulation is in effect, government officials will review information about the chemical compounds.

More Money Not the Answer for CBC

OTTAWA (CP) — The CBC is not coping as well as private television stations in meeting the competition from American networks and "more money alone is not the answer," says a special report on broadcasting tabled Monday in the Commons.

"If the CBC is to remain indispensable to Canadians, new and imaginative steps must be taken immediately to adapt CBC programming to the contemporary broadcasting environment," says the report prepared by the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission.

The report said one reason why the private networks have done better than the CBC against foreign competition is the increased use of American entertainment shows in the prime evening viewing hours.

However it also points out that CBC also is losing viewers in its news and public affairs shows, an area in which U.S. competition is not a factor.

But Jack Lusher, the CBC's manager of public relations, questioned the report's claim that the network is losing viewers to U.S. stations.

He claimed the CRTC figures stop in 1976 and since that time the trend has reversed.

The CRTC report said the CBC's share of the Canadian audience dropped to 22.5 per cent in 1976 from 34.6 per cent in 1967.

Lusher said this trend slowed in the fall of 1976 and almost stopped in 1977.

He said a slowdown in the expansion of cable television and an improvement in CBC's Canadian content have caused the change.

The report, covering the period between 1968 and 1978, says the extension of broadcast services has been a significant and important achievement.

It says 98.21 per cent of English-speaking Canadians outside of Quebec now can receive CBC-TV services and 95.54 per cent can receive other Canadian television services.

In Quebec 99 per cent of the population receives Radio-Canada television services and French-language service has been extended to 72.83 per cent of English-speaking Canadians.

The report says there are enormous financial and technical difficulties in providing basic Canadian services in the last two or three per cent of the unserved population.

Growth in cable stations meant by 1977 English-speaking Canadians had a wider choice of U.S. than Canadian channels. The report says this "is a very important factor, especially as it relates to the Broadcasting Act objective of the predominance of programming using Canadian creative and other resources."

The report says Canadian programming only attracts an over-all audience of all stations in English-speaking Canada of 29 per cent. Most Canadians watch entertainment programs which are overwhelmingly American.

Tiny Lots Attract American Buyers

MOOSE JAW (CP) — California residents are ready to put up $2 to buy a piece of Moose Jaw — one square centimetre.

R. H. "Scoop" Lewry, vice-chairman of the Canada Week Committee and originator of the idea, said sale of the lots on the city's north side is snowballing into a major fund-raising scheme for the committee. He said the project has gained international attention.

A Fresno, Calif., radio station has called him and he has received cheques from California residents to purchase the lots, Lewry said.

Sales will begin as soon as deeds for the 2,000 lots are printed, Lewry said.

The project has also caught attention of Council for Canadian Unity in Montreal.

Proceeds from the sale of the lots will be used to pay for events during Canada Week events — June 22-30.

Appeal Filed

SASKATOON (CP) — The lawyer representing a Hutterite colony charged with breaching a municipal planning bylaw filed an appeal Tuesday on a Court of Queen's Bench ruling that only one of five government employees must testify.

Ron Barclay said the notice of appeal is based on the grounds that Mr. Justice R. A. MacDonald erred in his conclusion that information received from the employees was confidential and therefore protected by Crown privilege.

The appeal would be heard March 29 in Saskatchewan Court of Appeal in Regina.

The Vanguard Hutterite Brethren Inc. is being tried on a charge under the Municipal Planning and Development Act.

Elk Insurance

REGINA (CP) — The Saskatchewan government will provide assistance to landowners for winter crop damage caused by deer and elk, Tourism and Renewable Resources Minister Adolph Matsalla has announced.

Maximum payments of $1,000 per landowner would be available, based on 75-percent of the market value of crop damage.

Mill Revamp Set

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — The Prince Albert Pulp Co. plans to spend more than $40 million in the next five years to modernize its mill, Karl Landegger, company president, said.

Landegger of New York said the firm is hoping for $6 million from a recently announced federal program to upgrade the pulp and paper industry.

Books Raise Row

GRAND PRAIRIE (CP) — Criticism has been levelled at two books being used in a sex-educaton course at Parkside Elementary School.

Two mothers with children at the school said they are concerned about the books — Approaching Adolescence — published by Alberta's social services department. They are used in Grade 6.

Sex education has been taught at Parkdale for a number of years but this is the first year for the books. They contain what school superintendent Derek Taylor describes as "specific and explicit diagrams and wording."

Armouries Picked

EDMONTON (CP) — The oldest armoury in Alberta and the first infantry armoury in Alberta, both in Edmonton, have been designated historic sites.

The Connaught Armoury, a two-storey, brick-and-sandstone structure at 85th Ave. and 103rd St., was built in 1911 and housed the 19th Alberta Dragoons. The Prince of Wales Armoury, at 10040 108th Ave., was constructed between 1913 and 1915.

Treu Told to Shut Up

OTTAWA (CP) — Montreal engineer Peter Treu, recently acquitted of charges under the Official Secrets Act, has been told to keep his mouth shut or he may face further charges, Gerald Baldwin (PC—Peace River) said in the Commons Tuesday.

Baldwin urged that Justice Minister Marc Lalonde tell officials to stop such "highly repugnant" suggestions.

Baldwin and former prime minister John Diefenbaker continued to press the government to pay compensation to Treu.

Noting Lalonde's refusal because such payment would set a precedent, Baldwin asked Prime Minister Trudeau on what basis the government paid former supply minister Jean-Pierre Goyer's legal costs after a civil servant sued Goyer for libel.

And Diefenbaker called the Lalonde position "specious." Only the federal government could launch a prosecution under the Official Secrets Act and it was responsible.

Lalonde said Diefenbaker was being specious.

Treu announced earlier Tuesday he has given Ottawa 90 days to reply to his request for $150,000 compensation. The money would cover $29,272.17 in legal fees plus salary for the five years he was investigated and prosecuted.

Treu was convicted by a provincial court judge after a secret trial and sentenced to two years in prison. The conviction was thrown out last month by the Quebec Court of Appeal, which said there was no evidence to support the criminal charges.

Baldwin, who helped defend Treu, said the engineer has lost his business and had been virtually bankrupted, despite being found innocent.

Treu said he has been persecuted by the government.

He worked 16 years for government as a communications expert who developed a new and secret system.

His security clearance was revoked without anyone telling him. In 1974, RCMP descended on his home, which he also was using as a business office, and seized thousands of documents.

In 1975, then justice minister Ron Basford authorized charges against Treu under the Official Secrets Act.

The resulting two-year trial was held in secret and the judgment by which he was convicted was not made public.

Let Them Eat Fowl: Whelan

OTTAWA (CP) — Beef and pork are too expensive for some families, but chicken and turkey are economical and nutritious buys, says Agricultural Minister Eugene Whelan.

Some fresh chicken cuts sell for between 69 cents and 79 cents a pound and provide more protein than ground beef, Whelan told the Commons agricultural committee Tuesday.

He said there are 31.5 grams of protein per 100 grams of edible turkey meat, compared with 24.4 grams in a similar portion of medium ground beef.

Canadians consumed a record amount of beef between 1975 and 1977 because of low prices. But beef prices have almost doubled in the last year.

"There isn't much we can do about the price of meat," said Whelan, "because there isn't that much available in the world."

Top grade steers sold for about 60 cents a pound last spring and now are 85 cents a pound. In the summer of 1977, they were under 50 cents a pound.

Spy 'Secrecy' Ruling Delayed

TORONTO (CP) — A provincial court judge Tuesday reserved decision on whether the Toronto Sun and two of its executives should be sent to trial for breaking the Official Secrets Act.

Judge Carl Waisberg said he will announce April 10 whether he will send the newspaper to trial on charges of illegally getting and publishing counter-intelligence secrets.

The maximum sentence for the offence is 14 years in prison.

In a column published last year, Peter Worthington, Sun editor-in-chief, wrote that despite expelling a number of Soviet spies from Canada, Prime Minister Trudeau was not taking the spy threat seriously.

Worthington listed 16 examples of Soviet spying in Canada. The cases were taken from a top secret 1976 RCMP report to government officials.

At the preliminary hearing Tuesday, John Robinette, lawyer for publisher Douglas Creighton, warned against the dangers of silencing a free and critical press.

Defence lawyers have argued that the material published no longer was secret and that exposing it was not contrary to the national interest.

However, John Scollin, the federal prosecutor, has argued that whatever is said about freedom of the press, the law is clear.

"Whether you like it or not is beside the point."

During the trial, defence lawyers argued that the report no longer was confidential because parts of it had been broadcast on television and referred to in the House of Commons.

Lapel 'Honor' Draws Laughs

OTTAWA (CP) — Commons Speaker James Jerome called it a milestone in Canadian parliamentary history Tuesday when he unveiled new lapel pins for MPs.

But a number of Conservative MPs expressed disgust, calling Jerome's presentation of the pins to four party leaders in the Commons a waste of time and dismissing the pins themselves as part of new security measures.

"I will not accept one," said former prime minister John Diefenbaker, "I refuse to wear one and that's that."

A spokesman for the former Conservative prime minister said he resented what he termed an attempt to disguse security measures as an honor.

The pins are the size of a dime and depict the gold mace, the symbol of Commons authority.

They are the idea of a Commons committee which was concerned that, unlike other countries, Canada did not have some type of identifying emblem for "those who have had the honor to serve their fellow citizens in an elected capacity in the national legislature," Jerome said.

He said all MPs will be given pins later in recognition of their service in the Commons.

As Trudeau stepped up to receive his pin he was greeted by Conservative catcalls suggesting it was a going-away gift.

Jerome said the pins would be used in conjunction with a new security program to more accurately identify people who work in the House of Commons. But he quickly added:

"I do not want to cast this pin in the security context, although it has an incidental relationship to security. This is an emblem of election to the House of Commons."

As Jerome was finishing his presentation, Conservative Heward Graftey (Brome-Missisquoi) walked out shaking his head and muttering that it was a waste of time.

"Somebody's gone nuts," he said.

Liberals Cross Signals

OTTAWA (CP) — An apparent mix-up in signals among Liberal MPs Tuesday night has delayed Commons passage of the government emergency oil rationing-allocation bill — possibly until next week.

Accusing the government of trying to delay its own bill, Conservative energy critic Allan Lawrence said his party will no longer cooperate in giving speedy passage to the bill.

After the Liberals won a voice vote on a government amendment to the bill, Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie rose to ask the Commons Speaker a question.

About 15 Liberals jumped to their feet when they saw Gillespie stand up. Conservatives took this to be a signal that government wanted all members called into the Commons for a recorded vote.

Apparently realizing their mistake, Liberal MPs sat down in confusion, but Conservatives insisted that a recorded vote should be held immediately, since that was apparently what the government wanted.

The Speaker postponed a recorded vote.

Dominion Day Critics Fail

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition MPs called on the Bible, Sir Leonard Tilley and Senator Eugene Forsey Tuesday to kill yet another attempt to rename the July 1st national holiday Canada Day.

By law, the holiday is called Dominion Day, and a succession of MPs insisted it should keep that name.

By the end of an hour set aside in the Commons to debate bills by individual MPs, they had their way. Liberal MP Hal Herbert from the Montreal riding of Vaudreuil had lost his seventh attempt in as many years to end the divisiveness he says is caused by the name Dominion.

Does the Rain Give Migraine?

TORONTO (CP) — The environment department may soon be able to say if a Vancouver spring shower causes thundering headaches.

In a joint study with The Migraine Foundation, 200 volunteers will attempt to solve the riddle about whether certain weather conditions can start or worsen a migraine attack, a department release said today.

Migraine sufferers selected from across the country began in January to log their locations and the severity of their headaches for a six-month diary.

Logs, to be matched with weather records in respective regions, will show if there is a relationship and what kinds of weather conditions were responsible for the painful affliction affecting about 20 per cent of Canadians.

Results of the $6,000 study are expected next September, says climatologist David Phillips.

If successful, Phillips says migraine sufferers could be warned of a possible attack with sufficient weather information.

Crackdown On Rollbacks

TORONTO (CP) — The practice of rolling back odometers on used cars for sale has reached epidemic proportions throughout Ontario, Frank Drea, consumer and commercial relations minister, said Tuesday.

He told a news conference that consumer ministry investigators have found organized operations across the province and are responding with a crackdown in co-operation with regional police forces and the RCMP.

Grit Battles Allmand on Bankruptcy Bill

OTTAWA (CP) — A Liberal back-bencher is preparing a campaign to oppose Consumer Affairs Minister Warren Allmand's efforts to get parliamentary approval for his new bankruptcy legislation.

Oakville MP Frank Philbrook said Tuesday the draft bill Allmand unveiled last month would jeopardize the livelihoods of thousands of workers.

The government is proposing that first claim on assets of a company that goes bankrupt belongs to its secured creditors, normally the banks and mortgage houses. Philbrook says a company's employees should have unlimited claim on the assets of their former employer before any other creditors.

Historically banks and mortgage companies have had the right of first claim.

Instead of changing this tradition, Philbrook says the government is perpetuating it in legislation biased against the ordinary wage earner. Without a great deal of administrative work, it should be possible to amend the proposed legislation to give workers first claim in the event of a bankruptcy, he says.

Former Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet attempted to do this in 1975. He introduced legislation which would have given employees first claim on up to $2,000 in unpaid wages and benefits.

However, Ouellet's bill was harshly criticized by bankers, businessmen, money lenders and senators. The proposed legislation was replaced Feb. 27 by Allmand's new bill which would allow secured creditors to keep their position at the front of the line.

"I was stunned when I saw the new legislation," said Philbrook in an interview.

Philbrook expressed his dissatisfaction to Allmand in the Commons this week, accusing his own party of devising a bill that will cost workers thousands of jobs and at least $4 million in lost wages.

"Some say the figure could be 10 times this amount," he added later.

Philbrook was told by Allmand the government is concerned about what happens to workers of bankrupt companies and is studying the feasibility of providing some kind of insurance to protect them from financial disaster.

"It would be better than nothing," said Philbrook. "But I'd be much happier to see workers get first and unlimited claim for all lost pay and fringe benefits."

Philbrook's commitment to his cause grew out of a sad Christmas Eve (1977) spent in his constituency office in Halton riding.

A local company had just declared bankruptcy. His office was filled with out-of-pocket workers wondering how to face the celebration ahead.

"I've never forgotten that evening. I feel very strongly about this issue."

Philbrook said most banks and mortgage houses could weather the blow of a single client's bankruptcy better than its workers.

He says he will oppose the bill when it is presented to the Commons health and welfare committee, oppose it in Parliament and lobby fellow MPs behind the scenes.

Government of Fear, Suspension

By THOMAS LIPPMAN

KABUL, Afghanistan (WP) — A Western resident of Kabul was describing the response he received when he invited his neighbor, an Afghan professor, to come to his house to watch a film.

"He said he couldn't do it, even after dark. He trusted me, he said, but he couldn't trust my servant not to report him."

That story encapuslated the atmosphere in the Afghan capital 10 months after the bloody coup that brought the pro-Soviet government of Prime Minister Nur Mohammed Taraki to power, By all accounts, the government, still trying to consolidate its grip on the country, rules through fear, arrest and suspension, discouraging contact with foreigners and suppressing dissent wih a heavy hand.

At night, just before the 11 p.m. curfew enforced by the Army, powerful spotlights play across the city as if to surprise subversive elements on their furtive rounds. The streets are nearly deserted well before curfew because, residents say, it is unwise to attract the attention of police patrols.

Unlike Marxist-ruled Ethiopia, which gave extensive publicity to its armed conflict with alleged counterrevolutionaries, the Taraki leadership claims there is no position and that all Afghans have supported the revolution from the beginning.

It is true that there is no counterpart here to the bloody gunfights and house-to-house searches with which the Addis Ababa government fought its foes at a comparable stage of the revolution. On the other hand, it is apparent that Taraki and his allies in the Peoples Democratic Party have spent much of their time since the overthrow of President Mohammed Daoud last April purging potential rivals and dissenters.

The Army, the civil service and the party itself have been stripped of prominent figures who have been executed, jailed or sent into exile — so much so that experienced foreign diplomats say they do not know who is chief of staff of the Army because there is hardly anyone still in uniform above the rank of major.

Politically unreliable intellectuals have been put out of the way. Foreign residents report that scores of doctors, professors and lawyers are "sitting home," doing nothing and avoiding any contact that might arouse suspicion. So intense is the suspicion of Westerners that the director of the official news agency, whose approval is required before any dispatches can be sent abroad, refused to allow journalists who had just interviewed the foreign minister to sit at a table in his office to prepare their articles.

Moves Swiftly

The government has moved swiftly against religious leaders who oppose what they see as the pro-communist and atheistic tendencies of Taraki's party. In January, well-informed sources report, one of the leading religious figures in Kabul, Ibrahim Mujadidi, was arrested along with several dozen relatives and friends, leaving other family members to carry on their opposition from exile across the border in Pakistan.

Shortly before that Hafizullah Amin, the foreign minister who is considered the second-ranking man in the government, issued a blunt warning to the religious community.

"Those religious leaders who are busy with religious performances and do not act against the interest of the people and the revolution will be respected profoundly by us," he said. "But those who instead of serving the sacred religion of Islam use religion as a means to serve the enemies of the revolution will face repercussions."

Senior dipolmats here say that forthright approach is typical. "They make no apologies," one ambassador said. "Virtue is defined as support of the revolution."

Settled by Death

"This is a violent society where scores are settled by killing," said another. "These people came to power on a wave of blood. They can't relax much."

Opponents of Taraki based in Pakistan describe his rule as a Stalinist dictatorship, ruling by brutality. The actual situation appears to be considerably more complicated.

Taraki and his supporters have acknowledged that their base of popular support was small when they seized power. An official history of last April's coup notes that it was engineered by a small group of Army officers who subscribed to Taraki's theories and makes no claim that it was a popular uprising.

"They've been very frank about it," one source said. "They decided that if they wanted to wait until they had mass public support it might take 30 years, so they decided to take power first and then build their base."

The government's techique has been to combine purges of "feudal" elements left over from the Daoud government and the monarchy that preceded it with populist measures aimed at increasing the number of people indebted to the government and to the party.

Some cadres sent into the villages to preach the revolutionary program have been resisted, even killed, by Afghans hostile to what is seen as a pro-communist, antireligious regime dominated by the Soviet Union. The government has responded wih swift punitive actions.

"Whenever you see a big description in the press of demonstrations of popular support in some village," a ranking diplomat said, "that means there's been an air strike there. They always respond with 110 per cent of what's necessary."

The combination of military reprisals against recalcitrant villagers, mass arrests in the cities and a sputtering campaign against an insurgency among tribesmen in the eastern provinces gives the impression that the Afghans leaders are embattled and strugglnig to survive, but experienced observers here say that is not necessarily the case.

They say the opposition, political and religious, is weak and fragmented and that repeated purges in the Army and civil services have eliminated most potential sources of disloyalty. These observers also say that some of the measures taken by the government to elicit popular acceptance appear to be succeeding, especially a large-scale land reform program launched in January.

"The class of people who owe something to this government is growing," a senior diplomat said. "They were trying to create a large number of people whose interests are tied up with those of the revolution, and the number of those who benefit is greater than the number of those who are hurt."

Diplomatic sources say there is deep skepticism about whether the government can enforce two of its decrees, abolishing usury and dowries, but that land reform is making headway. It is being run by the party, not by civil servants, again in a move to inspire party loyalty.

Foreign Minister Amin, asked recently about security measures in the capital, said they would be ended when the land reform is completed, probably this year.

Parcels of Land

About 200,000 families in a country of about 16 million people will receive parcels of land from the estates of big landowners, he said.

"There's no country in the world where land reform is going on so smoothly as here. When it is completed there will be no more need for any security measures," Amin said.

He made no claim, however, that there would be any liberalization of political life. Afghanistan is officially a one-party state and the press, economy and government are being molded into the service of that party.

In conversations after the recent kidnap-slaying of U.S. Ambassador Adolph Dubs, Amin and police commander Daoud Taroun insisted that the country is completely secure. They denied the existence of any political or religious opposition groups, reflecting the theme adopted by Taraki in an assessment of the revolution's progress a few months ago.

'Nipped in Bud'

"A complete security prevails throughout the country," he said. "Any plot hatched or effort made by the enemies among the armed forces was nipped in the bud. The morale among officers and soldiers of the armed forces is very high indeed. I defend the revolution under the leadership of my party with total gallantry, understanding, trust and confidence."

Hitch-Hikers Shot For Wasting Cigs

KLERKSDORP, South Africa (AP) — An instructor at a South African defence force cavalry centre testified he shot and killed two black hitch-hikers when they threw away cigarettes he gave them after just a few puffs.

Circuit Court Judge H. H. Moll had Stefanus Van Der Merwe, 19 committed to an asylum, ruling him not guilty by reason of insanity.

Old Slave Tunnel Discovered

ERIE, Pa. (UPI) — A tunnel once used by runaway slaves has been uncovered by a city crew trying to find out why the street alongside City Hall was sagging and collapsing in spots.

Construction workers hit the tunnel about 12 feet below the street surface while attempting to shore up the South Park Row pavement.

The tunnel is believed to have been part of the underground railway used to smuggle runaway slaves to freedom.

John Alexick, former museum curator and local history buff, said the tunnel was probably used as a hiding place for slaves awaiting ships from Erie to Canada.

"Probably as many as 100 slaves could have stayed down in the tunnels until they could get a break to come up and sneak down to the lake."

He said there was an elaborate tunnel system below Erie's older sections.

City Engineer Wasinder Mokha said the tunnel opening would be patched and left intact.

Pucker Up for Perfect Teeth

TORONTO (CP) — Just pucker up and start kissing if you want to keep your teeth in top shape, says a community health official who admits — ruefully — that he hasn't researched the subject.

Dr. Sam Green said kissing stimulates the mouth's saliva flow which helps fight decay.

The more saliva that showers the teeth, the less acid that stays there to start the decay process, Green said. He is director of the dental division of the community health department in the Metropolitan Toronto borough of Etobicoke.

"Kissing, or anything like sex that psychologically stimulates the secretion of saliva, is good for fighting tooth decay."

His theory is at odds with an Australian researcher who claims decay-producing organisms can be passed on to others through saliva.

A War of Wills In Irish Prison

BELFAST (Reuter) — Britain is showing no sign of relenting in its stern refusal to grant political prisoner status to 369 Irish guerrillas campaigning in the Maze, Northern Ireland's extaordinary prison camp.

For two years the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Aryy (IRA), prisoners' relatives, civil rights and groups favoring Northern Ireland's unification with Ireland have waged a no-holds-barred campaign at home and abroad to win political status, an emotional touchstone.

In the so-called dirty campaign, the men refuse to use the prison toilets or to clean out the chamber pots in their cells.

Bearded and unwashed, they sit huddled in blankets because they will not wear the prison uniform.

Britain, locked in a battle of wills with these men, has let loose a propaganda broadside of its own, distributing worldwide a news' sheet called Maze Prison — The Facts.

It contrasted in pictures a normal cell — they are the most modern and comfortable in Europe, say the British — with one occupied by a convicted Irish guerrilla, its walls thick with smeared excreta.

Britain ended political status for guerrilla convicts in Northern Ireland in March, 1976, as part of its drive to take the 10-year conflict out of politics.

Roy Mason, Britain's minister for Northern Ireland, insists that the "men of vioence" on both sides are common criminals.

But political or prisoner-of-war status is a do-or-die issue for militant Irishmen convicted of bomb and gun offences. They see themselves not as criminals but as Irish patriots, defenders of the North's 500,000 Roman Catholics.

"We swear, urinate and excrete in our cells," said a letter from a prisoner quoted recently by IRA publicists. "Conditions have deteriorated to the vilest dimensions one can imagine."

Guards, the letter said, refused to supervise a Catholic mass in the canteen because of the "acrid stench of 98 half-naked, unwashed men."

The British do not see themselves as being responsible for cell conditions.

When Ireland's Catholic Archbishop Tomas Fiaich emerged appalled from a visit to the Maze and announced he would inform the Vatican of the conditions, British officials acidly observed that nowhere had the cleric mentioned that the filth was self-imposed.

"They refuse to wash, use the toilet, exercise or make use of the library," says Maze Facts. "But as well as messing up their cells the prisoners have also deliberately destroyed all the furniture, smashed the original cell windows and have torn up religious magazines and Bibles."

The Maze, which contains about 1,600 prisoners, is no ordinary jail. Two hundred escape tunnels have been found by watchful guards in eight years — several too late — as well as enough homemade arms to equip a battalion.

The Maze was burned down in 1974 when prisoners rioted, battling hand-to-hand with British soldiers, and was rebuilt as a modern prison.

Its new H-blocks, so called because of their shape, have become fair game for the Republican movement. Its propagandists claim they can be compared with Nazi concentration camps.

But by no means all those in the H-blocks are involved in the "dirty" campaign. About 600 prisoners, largely pro-British Protestants, accept prison rules.

More remarkably, there are still 591 prisoners with political status — men convicted before March, 1976. They occupy the 11 remaining compounds of the old prison and parade and drill like prisoners-of-war under their own paramilitary commanders.

The pro-British "Loyalist" Protestant guerrillas do so under Britain's Union Jack flag.

More controversialhy, they train. Film smuggled out of the Maze and broadcast on British television has shown Loyalist and IRA prisoners attending classes in weapons training, bomb making and political theory.

Where Iran Power Lies

TEHRAN (AP) — Its membership is a mystery, but its powers are immense.

As Iran's revolution gropes for stability and a new order to bring peace, the authority wielded by the Islamic Revolutionary Council is the real glue holding the country together.

Its members authorize arrests, set up revolutionary courts, confirm death sentences, organize security and oversee food distribution through hundreds of revolutionary committees operating throughout Iran.

Since the bloody weekend of street battles in Tehran a month ago finally toppled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the council has been the true centre of power despite the appointment of a provisional government by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The stern-faced Shiite Moslem religious leader almost certainly heads the council. And the council's apparent determination to maintain supreme power during an increasingly uncertain stage of the revolution has brought the provisional government of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan into confrontation with Khomeini — who appointed him in the first place.

Bazargan's efforts to establish the authority of the provisional government have been undermined by the revolutionary committees to the extent that he was reported to have offered his resignation to Khomeini, who was said to have rejected it.

"The committees and radical groups with their interference and disturbances have made it impossible for the government to operate," the 70-year-old Bazargan said recently. "They persecute people, they arrest people, they issue orders, they oppose us, they are against our appointments. Our day has been turned into night."

The council's control of day-to-day life in Iran — through the revolutionary committees — is amply demonstrated by the situation in the capital.

A network of 14 revolutionary committees is operating throughout Tehran under the direction of Mohammad Reza Mahdavi-Kani, a 47-year-old white-turbaned mullah who says he was appointed directly by Khomeini but with the approval of Bazargan.

His over-all command of the hundreds of committees throughout the country also makes him one of the most powerful people in Iran.

Mahdavi-Kani operates from behind a desk, covered with a battery of constantly ringing telephone, in a small cubicle in the 70-year-old Majlis (parliament) buildings in the heart of Tehran.

Each of the Tehran committees, he says, is divided into subcommittees "responsible for such activities as security, intelligence, distribution and control of arms and ammunition and relief operations such as the provision of food and clothing."

To maintain law and order in the absence of effective police and while a national guard is being created, he says he has the co-operation of both Islamic and Marxist guerrillas.

Britons Steamed Up Over Locomotive

Written for CP
By Norman Cribbens

LOUGHBOROUGH, England (CP) — A group of 200 enthusiasts is trying to put Britain's last and most powerful steam passenger locomotive, the Duke of Gloucester No. 71000, back where they think it belongs — thundering down the permanent way.

After being sent to a scrapyard at Barry, South Wales, the Duke was rescued by Colin Rhodes, who organized the Duke of Gloucester Steam Locomotive Trust and bought the great steel hulk from British Rail for £5,000.

The giant locomotive, weighing nearly 158 tons, was taken to the Great Central Station at Loughborough in the county of Leicestershire, where she has been steadily reborn.

"I know it is strange to call the Duke 'she,' " Rhodes says, "but railway love is unisex and we all love her dearly. We've put in about 10,000 man hours on the Duke so far and we've spent about £15,000 on restoration.

"We've had a lot of help from commerce and industry and we've had gifts of products and services to the value of about £60,000 pounds. This project eats up people and cash — but we have a hard-core of about 20 men and women who work here each weekend," Rhodes says.

His group demonstrates a wide range of abilities — members weld metal, make patterns, grind valves and produce technical drawings.

"In private life, they do very different things. I'm a quality control supervisor with a metal firm. We have a botanist, a bank manager, a cancer research specialist and a philosopher."

The youngest member of the team is Philip Fearn, 17, an apprentice with a car manufacturing firm. He had never seen a steam locomotive in action until he visited the Duke at Loughborough.

Her home, the Grand Central Station, had not been used for years. Now it has been spruced up by the steam enthusiasts so that the seven platforms, the booking office and the refreshment buffet have a lively functional look.

Surprisingly, the Duke's enormous, yet perfectly balanced hulk can be pushed in and out of its shed on roller bearings. The Duke's loyal workmen arm themselves with great wooden staves which they jam against the two-metre-high driving wheels to stop the locomotive from gathering speed as it travels down a slight incline.

Slowly, silently, the Duke emerges from the shed into bright sunlight. She has been painted ash-grey, but her squat round funnel is black.

Noises Cancel Noises

LONDON (CP) — The answer to the problem of noise is more noise.

The noise of ventilation and air conditioning systems in offices and factories can be more than halved by introducing a similar noise to cancel out the first, British scientists say.

It has long been thought possible that low-frequency noise could be combatted in this way, but it is only now that research is beginning to make it practical. At least four British teams of scientists are working on what has become known as anti-sound.

This quiet revolution is being achieved by using microphones to pick up sound that travels through typical ventilation and other ducts as well as along many different types of pipeline.

The noises are then electronically processed and fed to loudspeakers mounted on the wall of the duct. Sound waves having the identical amplitude to the original noise are then generated half a cycle out of phase with that noise.

The result is that each set of sound waves suppresses the other.

Tests at the acoustics laboratory at Chelsea College in London have shown that this system is capable of reducing noise by an average 16 decibels, which means that a loud ventilator rumble is cut to a whisper. Full-scale laboratory test rigs have confirmed the theories, and the anti-sound system now is to be offered for commercial production.

Prof. John Williams of the engineering department at Cambridge University believes it eventually will be possible to silence or significantly reduce noises out of doors as well as in offices and factories.

He is experimenting with fans blowing jets of air carrying anti-sound into noisy machine shops. It is possible that houses plagued by noise from nearby motorways or airports might be protected by a system based on this work, he says.

Tigers Make Comeback

MORGES, Switzerland (UPI) — The tiger, on the verge of extinction 10 years ago, has received a new lease on life, the World Wildlife Fund said.

Fund president John H. Loudon said tigers are flourishing in special reserves in India and Nepal as a result of strict protection and habitat management.

The tiger was officially declared a threatened species 10 years ago and a program called "Operation Tiger" was launched to ban hunting and finance conservation measures.

More Words, Fewer Shells in Vietnam

BANGKOK (AP) — Fighting in the Vietnam-China border war wound down today, intelligence officials in Bangkok reported, but the propaganda battle intensified.

"Chinese troops beheaded and disembowelled almost 100 children, burned and looted properties, raped women and mercilessly killed people with utter brutality everywhere they went," said the Vietnamese foreign ministry in a statement broadcast by Radio Hanoi

"They broke people's skulls with gun butts, stabbed people with spears, beheaded and chopped people into pieces and threw hand grenades into people's shelters."

The chief of Hanoi's general staff, Gen. Van Tien Dung, said the Vietnamese now consider China "our most direct and most dangerous enemy."

"The Vietnamese will resolutely fight against the enemy if they stubbornly escalate the war," he said.

China's Xinhua (Hsinhua) news agency had its own version of events. It said Chinese soldiers were building new homes for the Vietnamese because retreating Vietnamese troops looted and burned the buildings.

It also said the general mobilization ordered by Hanoi since the Chinese invasion "strengthens Fascist military rule" and shows Vietnam is "continuously agitating for war and squeezing the people."

In neighboring Laos, which last week expelled Chinese technicians and workers who had been building roads in the northern part of the country, the pro-Vietnamese government's newspaper Siang Prasson said that "instead of building roads, Chinese workers dug combat trenches and made other preparations for war."

25 Killed in Crash of Bus, Gas Tanker

SALONICA (AP) — Twenty-three Greek tourists and two Yugoslav truck drivers were killed today when a passenger bus and a loaded gasoline tanker truck crashed head on 40 kilometres north of Salonica, police said.

The police said 29 Greeks in the bus survived along with a third Yugoslav in the tanker truck, but all were seriously injured.

The bus was en route from Salonica, the capital of northern Greece, to Skopje, in southern Yugoslavia. The police said they had no indication yet of the cause of the collision.

Opening lead — king of spades.

Assume you're West defending against four hearts, and lead the king of spades after your partner made a pre-emptive overcall of three spades. East plays the jack of spades on your king and the question is what you should lead next. Remember, all you see is dummy's hand and your own.

There is some danger that you might relax at this point and lead another spade in obedience to your partner's signal for a spade continuation. However, if you followed this impulse, it would cost you the contract.

East would win your second spade with the ace but could then make no return that would defeat the contract. His best play would be a third round of spades, but declarer would ruff low in his hand and, whatever you did on this trick, your only other winner would turn out to be the ace of trumps.

The proper play at trick two is to lead the ace of hearts, and then folow this by playing the spade deuce to your partner's ace at trick three. When East now leads a third round of spades, South finds it impossible to stop you from scoring the setting trick with the nine of trumps — whether he chooses to ruff the third spade high or low.

Actually, the recommended play is certain to beat the contract unless East started out with eight spades instead of only seven. This remote possibility should be ruled out by you, even if only because the contract could not possibly be stopped in that case.

Upon full reflection, the ace of trumps play at trick two stands out a mile. However, it is not an easy play to make unless some kind soul rang a bell lound and clear to warn you before you played a card at trick two.

Death Threats Back Curfew

SALISBURY (AP) — A dusk-to-dawn curfew will begin in Salisbury's industrial areas Sunday and violators are likely to be shot, police announced today.

"Our men will be under instructions to call on unauthorized people to halt in the curfew area, but if they don't they are likely to be shot at;" a spokesman said.

He said the curfew was "a precautionary measure to prevent any further possibility of terrorist attack."

In the last three months, insurgents have attacked a power station and an oil depot in Salisbury. The power plant was undamaged, but millions of gallons of fuel were lost in the depot fire.

Curfews exist in most rural areas, infiltrated by guerrillas fighting a six-year-old war for control of Rhodesia. Guerrilla leaders have pledged to extend the war to the cities and step up their campaign during general elections next month.

Rhodesia's new army commander, Lt.-Gen. Andrew MacLean, said guerrilla promises to wreck the elections "will lead to an escalation of the war — but to the detriment of the terrorists."

Rhodesia's supreme military commander, Lt.-Gen. Peter Walls, said Tuesday the casualty toll in war would rise higher if the guerrillas tried to sabotage the polls.

"We are going to have to protect the people before and during the elections and this is a pretty hefty task," the general said.

Aerial Attack Against SWAPO Base

WINDHOEK (Reuter) — South African forces destroyed a guerrilla base of the South-West Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO)) outside the territory today, regional defence chief Maj.-Gen. Jan Geldenhuys announced.

He described the raid as "an air attack mounted in depth against a terrorist transit and logistical base."

It was the second raid in eight days against bases of the guerrillas, waging a limited bush war aimed at ending South African rule in Namibia, also known as South-West Africa.

Three-Day Reprieve For U.S. Missionary

MARAWI, Philippines (UPI) — Moslem rebel kidnappers holding an American missionary under threat of death granted him a three-day reprieve today within hours of his execution deadline.

Officials of the United Church of Christ said they received a new note from the kidnappers saying they now had until Friday to raise the ransom of $68,025 or the Rev. Lloyd Van Vactor would be killed.

The Rev. Peter Gowling, a missionary colleague of Van Vactor, said the rebel note warned church officials that they "would be sorry" if the ransom demand was not met.

Gowling, of Stratford, Conn., said church officials had informed the kidnappers in a note that they did not have the funds to pay the ransom. "We simply cannot get blood from stones," he said.

A Moslem source said Van Vactor was believed to be unharmed and in good condition but may be under severe strain because the guerrillas have had to move him from one jungle hideout to the other to avoid detection.

Van Vactor, of Scranton, N.D., was abducted six days ago by a group calling itself the "Partisan Brigade," a faction of the Moro National Liberation Front.

Gowling, a director of the Dansalan Junior College headed by Van Vactor in the picturesque Moslem city of Marawi, issued a plea for the life of his colleague.

"Our hope is to buy time and explain to them they have made a terrible mistake," he said. The rebels obviously thought that "we are a multinational corporation making a lot of money."

Carloads of Moslem friends of the longtime Christian missionary flocked to the college offering gifts of money and prayers in an attempt to save his life.

Jibes, Insults Fly on TV As Smith, Nkomo Clash

LONDON (AP) — Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith and black guerrilla leader Joshua Nkomo traded taunts and epithets in a British television program shown live by satellite hookup Tuesday.

Smith, in Salisbury, Rhodesia, called Nkomo a terrorist. Nkomo, speaking from his base in Zambia, called Smith a fascist.

Television personality David Frost arranged the program, which also included former British prime minister Harold Wilson in London and Andrew Young, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, as well as Senator S. I. Hayakawa (Dem. Calif.), in the United States.

Frost's expressed goal of "hoping to start a dialogue" between Smith and Nkomo failed as insults flew.

Smith said Young showed "abysmal ignorance" of Rhodesia, where black guerrillas have been waging war against Smith's government for six years.

Young blamed Smith for the failure of Anglo-U.S. efforts to arrange all-party peace talks followed by free elections. "Mr. Smith only wants to participate in elections he runs himself," Young said.

Smith has announced his candidacy in elections scheduled for April 20 among the country's 6.8 million blacks and 260,000 whites. Voters in the universal-sufferage balloting will choose the country's first black-dominated government but whites will be assured of one-quarter of the cabinet seats for at least five years.

Smith terminated his white-minority government a year ago when he joined three moderate black leaders to form a biracial government that called the election.

Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, co-leaders of the Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance, refused to join in negotiations that led to the biracial government and have vowed to disrupt the elections.

Nkomo called the planned elections a "fake and a fraud," citing the lack of black-voter registration.

Pressed by Frost to state his terms for peace talks, Nkomo declared: "Our only proposal now is to fight Smith and defeat him. Defeat him we will."

This brought a response from Smith, who said: "The Patriotic Front does not want an all-party conference because . . . that would lead to a decision through the ballot box and the Patriotic Front would lose out."

When Frost suggested Smith had shown some movement by agreeing to a black government, Nkomo said: "Smith is just a settler and he can't tell us he is moving. What do you propose to a fascist, a swindler?"

Wilson, prime minister when Smith unilaterally declared Rhodesia's independence from Britain in 1965 to head off black rule, urged the sending of observers to the elections and recognition of the new government if the balloting was fair.

Combat Role Out for U.S. In N. Yemen

WASHINGTON (WP) — U.S. Defence Department officials, in an evident effort to allay concern over deepening military involvement in the Arabian peninsula, said Tuesday that the number of U.S. experts being sent to North Yemen would be less than 100 and that none would have a combat mission in that nation's border war.

Spokesman Thomas Ross said that the role of "less than 70" uniformed Mobile Training Teams would be "training in rear areas."

Another group of some 25 experts, most civilian technicians, would be assigned to North Yemen with the squadron of U.S. F-5 interceptor planes that is part of the U.S. military plan to support pro-western North Yemen in its war with pro-Soviet South Yemen.

Ross also revealed that a undetermined number of North Yemen pilots already have been receiving F-5 training in Saudi Arabia since January and could be ready to handle this aircrft in a matter of weeks.

The 12 Northrop-built F-5s will be shipped from California to Dahran, Saudi Arabia, March 15.

Pentagon officials pointed out Tuesday that some North Yemen pilots are proficient with Soviet built Mig-17 aircraft and should be able to make the shift to the American interceptors without a long training period.

It was unclear whether the new shipment of F-5s, costing some $300 million and paid for by Saudi Arabia, would remain in Dahran or would be shifted later to North Yemen.

Ross said that "as many as 100 to 200 persons could be involved in F-5 support," but that all but about 25 would remain in Saudi Arabia. Most were described as "contractor personnel" from Northrop, with the job of assembling, providing technical assistance and supervising aircraft maintenance.

It was left unclear whether American pilots would fly the planes once they reached their initial base in Saudi Arabia. Ross stressed that "there is no intention for them to fly the planes in or over Yemen."

Since U.S. military aid to Cambodia and South Vietnam escalated into a massive U.S. military involvement in the 1960s, technical military assistance has been a sensitive issue. Defence Department officials say, thus far at least, most congressional reaction to the U.S. buildup in the Arabian peninsula has been supportive.

Pentagon officials stressed that, in regard to the Mobile Training Teams, it was normal for such teams to accompany military hardware to many different countries.

Two U.S. experts already have arrived in Yemen to assist in training Yemeni soldiers in the use of the Vulcan antiaircraft gun.

In addition to the Vulcans and the F-5s, the Carter administration has ordered the immediate shipment of tanks, personnel carriers and other equipment to North Yemen.

Reports on the border fighting were conflicting, and the Pentagon had no new information on action taking place in the 9,000-foot high mountain passes. Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel-Halim Khaddam said that the two Yemens have begun implementing Arab Council resolutions aimed at ending the clashes, according to a Reuter report from the North Yemen capital of Sana. But there were other reports of North Yemen air raids against South Yemen.

5 N-Power Plants Shut As Design Error Found

WASHINGTON (WP) — The U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission staff Tuesday ordered five eastern nuclear power plants shut down because their earthquake-proofing might be inadequate.

"A simple arithmetical error" in a computer formula used to design the plants seven years ago may have left the cooling system pipes only one-sixth as strong as they should be, according to Harold R. Denton, director of the NRC's office of nuclear reactor regulation.

If the pipes failed in an earth tremor, the main reactor could lose its coolant and the reactor's radioactive core could overheat and melt, releasing radiation into the environment, he said.

The plants affected, the only ones in which the faulty design was used, are Duquesne Power Co.'s Beaver Valley at Shippingport, Pa., near Pittsburgh; Virginia Electric and Power Co.'s Surry I and II at Gravel Neck, Va.; New York Power Authority's James Frederick plant at Scriba, N.Y.; and the Maine Yankee plant, owned jointly by 11 utilities and run by Maine Yankee Atomic Power Co.

Denton said it would be "some months" before the five units could evaluate the extent to which they are affected by the design error and then order and install the necessary replacement pipe supports so that they could reopen. In the meantime, NRC chairman Joseph Hendrie told a Senate hearing later in the day, the shutdown will cost consumers "an arm and a leg."

"We didn't even need a phone to hear the shrieks from the energy department over this thing," Hendrie said.

The department of energy had been planning to ease the impact of reduced oil shipments from Iran by shifting power from nuclear plant areas to those where power plants are dependent upon imported oil. Now, Hendrie told the Senate energy conservation and regulation subcommittee, the country will have to burn an additional 200,000 barrels of oil each day to replace the electricity of the five nuclear units.

That, according to spokesmen for Beaver Valley, Main Yankee and Fitzpatrick, will cost their consumers about $400,000 more each day the plants are shut down. The sum will be passed along in fuel adjustment charges. A spokesmen for Virginia Electric and Power Co said the cost for the Surry shutdown could not be calculated immediately.

Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, criticized Hendrie and the commission for having no alternative but shutdown in cases like this one. "It's typical of the tradition of keeping your hind end covered while someone else pays the price," he said.

Hendrie noted that no attempt to calculate the price had been made since the NRC's responsibility was safety without regard to economic and social costs.

The design error was discovered when engineers at Beaver Point tried to figure out last December why some valves in the piping system were heavier than others, Denton told a news conference. They found that valve specifications under current computer formulas did not coincide with those under which the plant had been built.

Further checking, Denton said, revealed last week that the old computer formula, out of use since 1972, had subtracted horizontal stress calculations from vertical stress figures instead of adding them together. The formula, by Stone and Webster, a Boston-based nuclear design and construction firm, led to supports for the pipes that were in some cases one-third to one-sixth as strong as NRC regulations said they should be.

Although the NRC spot checks all safety systems before issuing operating licenses to nuclear power plants, the particular computer formula in use had never been checked for accuracy, Denton said. Stone and Webster abandoned the formula in 1972 but not necessarily because of this problem, he added.

Stone and Webster spokesmen John Landis said the firm "learned better methods" of calculating stress and had not known of the problem when changing techniques. "We are not prepared to say yet if the design itself needs changing," he said. "We only know that the method used then was not the one we would use today and does not give the same results." Only extensive testing will show whether the formula resulted in an inadequate design, he said.

Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., who chairs another subcommittee with budget responsibility for the NRC, said he thought it "highly disturbing that the faulty design was discovered accidentally by (nuclear) industry representatives and not as the result of the NRC's regular inspection program."

That, he said, "raises serious questions as to whether there are other undiscoverd design errors that, like this one, could knock out the safety systems of nuclear reactors in emergency situiocs."

Welk Wants Everybody to Dance to His Tune. . .

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Lawrence Welk, 76, the benign paterfamilias of big band music, is something of a benevolent despot whose brood of musicians, singers and hoofers usually dance to his tune — or else.

Pretty, blonde dancer Cissy King says she got out of step and was fired last October, leading to some bickering and misunderstandings.

Welk, whose brand of uh-one-and-uh-two music is most beloved by the Sun City set, has suffered family skirmishes in the past, none of which has enhanced his image as a two-step combination of Uncle Sam and Santa Claus.

Twenty years ago his "Champagne Lady" of six years, singer Alice Lon, departed allegedly because she revealed "too much knee" on Welk's TV show. Pianist Tiny Little and clarinetist Pete Fountain quit, too.

There was an uproar a decade ago when the Lennon Sisters — Janet, Dianne, Kathy and Peggy — quit en masse to seek greener pastures.

Cissy said she had no intention of quitting Welk's happy troupe. As a dancer with partner Bobby Burgess, Cissy was featured on Welk's TV show for almost 12 years.

Then last October, according to Cissy, Welk called her into his office and said, "Cissy, I'm gonna have to let you go."

Top U.S. General Wants Draft Back

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Army's top general urged on Tuesday an immediate return to the military draft and the heads of the air force, navy and marines said conscription is likely if not inevitable.

Gen. Bernard Rogers, chief of staff of the army, called for an annual reserve draft of 75,000 to 100,000 persons for six years of service — a manpower pool which would be used in wartime to replace battlefield casualties.

The four military leaders — all members of the joint chiefs of staff — recommended, as a minimum, resumption of military registration. There was some difference among the officials on whether women should be required to sign up for possible service.

Rogers said he was not ready to say women should be drafted — even for noncombat duties.

Under Rogers' proposal, draftees would undergo six months of training and then return to civilian life. He proposed that they be called up twice during the remainder of their service for refresher training.

He estimated the proposal would cost between $470 million and $646 million,

The general made his recommendation to the Senate armed services committee's manpower subcommittee, which is reviewing problems with the all-volunteer military.

Iranians Picket British

TEHRAN (AP) — More than 1,000 chanting and placard-waving students demonstrated in front of the British Embassy in Tehran today, denouncing foreign "imperialism" and protesting alleged mistreatment of Iranians at London's Heathrow Airport.

Some Iranian students and visitors reported have complained they were turned away at London's international airport, some for not having adequate funds for their stay.

The demonstrators, mostly high school-aged students, paraded in front of the embassy on Ferdowsi Avenue. No violence was reported.

"Mostly we are demonstrating against the treatment of the Iranians at London airport," Ali Sadr, a university student said. "We are asking a change of policy for Iranians entering Britain."

Iranians entering Britain are reported to have been harassed by British immigration officers, and Iranian press reports have played up the alleged incidents.

A delegation from the demonstrators, including two turbaned mullahs, or Moslem clergymen, were allowed to enter the embassy and meet British embassy officials.

10 Cases Of Brutality?

BELFAST (AP) — Allegations that police used brutal methods on 160 suspected guerrillas are unfounded in all but 10 cases, and some of the 10 are debatable, Police Chief Sir Kenneth Newman said Tuesday.

The public prosecutor has not decided whether to charge police interrogators involved in seven of the cases and has found no grounds to prosecute in the other three, Newman said.

Fresh allegations that Northern Ireland police beat up suspects were made last weekend by police surgeon Dr. Robert Irwin.

Irwin said he saw at Belfast's Castlereagh Barracks, the main police interrogation centre for suspected members of the mainly Catholic Irish Republic Army, up to 160 people with injuries such as burst eardrums and damaged bones.

The British government dismissed Irwin's charges, but promised to investigate.

In the first detailed official response, Newman said in a statement that Irwin examined only 65 prisoners who complained of maltreatment.

In most cases Irwin reported no maltreatment, said the injuries were minor or made no report, Newman said. "In only 10 cases did he either agree with the complaint or find injuries which he believed were consistent with the allegations."

Nearly 2,000 people have been killed since 1969 in Northern Ireland, where the IRA's provisional wing is trying to end British rule and unite the mainly Protestant province with the prodominantly Catholic Irish republic.

3rd Secretary Skips to East

BONN (AP) — West German officials said Tuesday they are investigating a secretary to a top conservative member of parliament for possible espionage activity.

The officials said the woman, described as "very reserved," is reported to have fled to East Germany with another suspected spy.

The Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe said it began investigating Christel Broszey, 31, on Monday when she failed to appear at work.

Miss Broszey is employed by Kurt Biedenkopf, who belongs to the conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU) and is a member of parliament.

She is the third CDU woman staff member to come under suspicion as agent for East Germany within a week.

Bonn recently has begun a campaign to warn single government secretaries against Romeo-type agents from East Germany who feign love for lonely women in exchange for state secrets.

Officers in the prosecutor's office said they believe Miss Broszey fled with 41-year-old Konrad Kipping, an agricultural engineer and salesman.

The officials said the man's identity was established by documents found in the woman's Bonn apartment and that a duplicating machine was found there during a search by federal agents.

"She did not even have a bottle of nail varnish in her office," said one secretary who dealt with Miss Broszey. "No vacation photos, no flowers and no stuffed dolls or animals."

The sources said Miss Broszey worked for Biedenkopf both in his current job as CDU vice-chairman and previously as executive secretary. Prior to that she was secretary to Konrad Kraske, Biedenkopf's predecessor in the top party job.

Now Oregon Aiming At Diapers

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The state that banned pull tabs and aerosols now wants to do away with disposable diapers and plastic milk bottles.

There are also bills before the 1979 Oregon legislature to ban the use of plastic meat wrappings and single-serving size packets of ketchup and mustard. Some legislators would like to extend the ban to plastic soft-drink bottles.

"Oregon has always been very innovative when it comes to environmental issues before the rest of the country," said state Representative Mary Burrows, sponsor of the bill to ban throw-away baby diapers.

She said she wants to prohibit the use of disposable diapers in Oregon because they are not biodegradable and it's against Oregon law to dump untreated solid waste in landfills.

"I was really apprehensive that people would perceive it as a big joke," said Ms. Burrows. "But one of the first letters I got was from a forestry official who said the diapers are their biggest problem.

"I've had four children and I didn't have a dryer," she added. "I've been there. I don't think people realize sometimes there is a need to detour our own convenience."

A hearing on the plastic-bottle bill drew plastic industry representatives from New York, Massachusetts and New Jersey.

"Other states have given up," said state Representative Nancie Fadeley, sponsor of the milk-bottle bill. "Oregon was ahead on the bottle bill and aerosol ban. Oregon goes ahead and does it. We listen to what people want, not the lobbyists."

Ms. Fadeley had to schedule an extra session of her committee Tuesday night to accommodate all the industry witnesses who had flown in to testify about the proposed ban on returnable plastic milk bottles.

Oregon's bottle bill, which took effect in 1972, prohibited the sale of non-returnable beer and soft-drink containers and made pull rings on beverage containers illegal.

In 1975, the legislature banned aerosol sprays because of evidence that fluorcarbons damage the earth's protective ozone layer. That ban took effect March 1, 1977.

Another bill sponsored by Ms. Burrows would require that fresh meat, poultry and seafood be packaged in biodegradable containers. The measure would ban the use of polyvinylchloride as a wrap for perishable food after July 1, 1980.

Lakes Still Toxic, Says IJC

OTTAWA (CP) — The International Joint Commission (IJC) says pollution of the Great Lakes by toxic substances remains serious and "effective controls are needed promptly."

The IJC's annual report for 1978, released Tuesday, said there have been limited reductions in the level of PCBs, Mirex, DDT, mercury and phosphorus in the lakes since the 1972 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement was signed.

But these improvements "have not yet reached substantial proportions, nor are they basin-wide," said the commission, the U.S.-Canada body which oversees boundary water problems. The commission report was submitted to the Canadian and American governments.

PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls) are heat-resistant chemicals used mainly in closed electrical systems. Mirex and DDT are pesticides while phosphorus helps algae grow. Algae removes much-needed oxygen from the water.

The IJC noted its survey was undertaken before the two countries signed a beefed-up version of the 1972 agreement in November last year.

Among other things, the new agreement takes a "cradle-to-grave" approach to toxic chemicals, monitoring their introduction, use and disposal to prevent new hazards to the lakes.

Exxon Cuts Off Non-Affiliates

WASHINGTON (WP) — In a move that underscores the growing fragmentation and instability in world oil markets, Exxon Corp. announced Tuesday it will gradually end all sales of crude oil to companies not affiliated with Exxon.

Other major oil companies, including Standard Oil of California, once the world's largest seller of crude, also are cutting such sales as demand at their own refineries grows, and more and more oil production in many nations is owned and sold by national oil companies.

The action by Exxon and other companies means many crude buyers will have to deal directly with a national oil company, such as the National Iranian Oil Co., for crude.

At the moment, NIOC is selling only spot cargoes at prices up to $20 a barrel. Libya and Iraq have reduced sales under firm contracts at regular Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries prices so that they can sell their crude in the spot market and make a higher profit.

Exxon said it would not renew current contracts with so-called third-party markets when they expire, except for a six-month period at one-half the volume called for in the old contract.

Hardest hit by Exxon's decision is Japan, which gets about 5 per cent of its oil through trading companies that have contracts with Exxon. Last year, Japan consumed about 5 million barrels of oil a day, virtually all of which was imported.

The contracts in Japan begin to expire at the end of this month. Worldwide, Exxon has between 25 and 30 such contracts covering about 500,000 to 550,000 barrels per day.

"The plain fact of the matter is that we just don't have the oil," an Exxon spokesman said. Even after eliminating all third-party contracts between now and 1982, Exxon still will not have enough crude to cover the needs of its own refineries and those of its affiliates around the world, he said.

Exxon probably was forced to its decision, according to oil industry sources, when British Petroleum canceled a contract to supply Exxon with about 300,000 barrels a day of light oil.

Yen Tumbles

TOKYO (AP) — Exxon's decision to cut oil sales to Japanese companies not affiliated with it pushed the dollar up nearly three yen in Tokyo today to its highest rate in nearly nine months. The dollar made slight gains and losses in early European trading and gold slipped.

The U.S. dollar closed at 209.125 yen in Tokyo, the highest closing rate on the Japanese market since June 23, 1978. It closed Tuesday at 206.15 in Tokyo, then rose to 207.73 in New York when word of the Exxon cut got out.

2-Door sports sedan with factory sunroof. Finished in Metallic Silver with accent stripes. Black corduroy upholstery with orange trim. The 5-speed overdrive transmission and 2.1 litre fuel injected motor, coupled with competition suspension, alloy wheels with Pirelli CN36 high speed radials, produce sports car handling. Functional front spoiler, Quartz iodine headlights plus driving lights complete the package.

Road & Track, March 1979, had these comments to make:

The 242GT is actually a very representative car of the last of the Seventies: it's not powered by any sort of unusually thirsty engine; it does have suspension refinements that make it more entertaining to drive, and it is a leader in occupant safety aspects, like downsized cars that haven't been downsized, because they have been the logical size all along. The efficient use of space is commendable and should be studied by some other carmakers. Then there's the big plus factor, Volvo's reputation for reliability. All in all, it's an excellent combination.

Press Throttle: Editor

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — The editor of The Progressive magazine today charged the U.S. government with attempting to assert "incredibly broad powers of secrecy and censorship" to stop the publication of an article about the atom bomb.

A hearing is scheduled in Milwaukee Friday on the Justice Department's request for a permanent injunction against publication of the article by freelance writer Howard Morland.

The case could become the first major test of the First Amendment's freedom of the press guarantees since the Pentagon Papers case of 1971.

"That's preposterous," Progressive Editor Irwin Knoll said.

B.C. Jump In Jobless 'Seasonal'

The latest jump in unemployment statistics for B.C. is just a reflection of the usual seasonal fluctuation, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Tuesday.

Statistics Canada reported Tuesday that the province's jobless rate bucked the national trend in February, rising by 0.3 percentage points compared with a 0.2 percentage-point decline across the country.

The B.C. jobless rate stood at 8.5 per cent in February, compared with 8.2 per cent in January and 8.9 per cent in December.

The seasonally-adjusted national unemployment rate fell to 7.9 per cent last month from 8.1 per cent in January.

Williams said statistics for past years show the same unemployment bubble in January and February, adding that the jump this year is not as bad as it has been in the past.

The minister said there now are 30,000 more people employed in B.C. than a year ago but the labor force has grown by 32,000.

Ocean Falls Just Not 'Sexy'

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

B.C.'s ugly-duckling pulp mill at Ocean Falls was left out of the list of resources in the five-free share giveaway because brokers felt it isn't "sexy" enough, the Times has learned.

About 18 months ago top investment brokers and marketing experts were asked to study the original package of government-owned resources that would be given away and put up for sale through share certificates.

Their analysis?

The package wasn't, in their words, sexy enough and contained a real loser — Ocean Falls.

The mill, they claimed, has too bad a reputation to be marketable.

And they suggested two of the more attractive government-owned resources be included — the 10 per cent ownership in Westcoast Transmission and the northeast oil and gas drilling rights.

The government acquiesced to the Howe Street executives and Ocean Falls was dropped from the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation package and the Westcoast shares and drilling rights substituted.

That move took place more than a year ago.

On March 9, 1978, most of the shares in the original holding company for the province-owned resources — B.C. Cellulose Corp. — were transferred to BCRIC.

Only Ocean Falls was left out, remaining a separate corporation.

BCRIC now owns the pulp mills at Prince Rupert and Castlegar, the two central B.C. sawmills under Plateau Mills, the Kootenay Forest Products lumber mill in Nelson, 10 per cent of Westcoast Transmission common shares and gas and oil licences of five-year's duration on 2.3 million acres of Crown land in northeastern B.C.

The man who put together the original package that the investment brokers rejected is Ray Williston, president of Ocean Falls' parent, B.C. Cellulose, and one of the strongest advocates of that coastal community's pulp mill.

But even he agrees with the move to dump Ocean Falls from the package.

More important to BCRIC than the share giveaway, says Williston, is the money that will be generated by the remainder of the shares that will be sold.

The investment brokers were right. Ocean Falls would be a deterrent to sales, at least until B.C. investors are educated, he says.

Once B.C. Cellulose gets Ocean Falls going it will have no further role to play. Ocean Falls will either be purchased by BCRIC or continue as its own Crown corporation.

Problems at B.C.'s oldest pulp mill will need up to $100 million in renovations to be rectified.

BCRIC is expecting up to 1.5 million applications by eligible British Columbians for the five free shares the government has offered in the corporation.

PERSIAN RUG SALE
First Public Viewing and Sale)

IF: There is a Persian rug on the floor. What does that tell you about its owner? Probably that he is well off. Also, he'll be a secure person because a Persian Rug is a good saleable item in these inflation ridden times. It is easier to sell expensive Oriental carpets today in a sluggish economy than it was in the 1950's and 60's although the average price of an authentic Oriental carpet has greatly increased in recent years. An Oriental rug is an excellent hedge against inflation because its value increases constantly. The reason for this is the increased wealth and industrialization of Mid-East countries. Weavers and master artists are leaving their traditional work and are entering industrial employment. In addition the Shah of Iran had introduced compulsory education thereby effectively eliminating the employment of children in rug weaving, says Ejaz Khan of Bokhara Carpet Palace Ltd. Mr. Kahn will be dislaying an excellent selection of Persian carpets & rugs that will appeal to the discriminating and budget conscious home decorator and art lovers, offered to you at Bargain Prices. Mr. Khan invites you to come and investigate the opportunities provided by Oriental carpets, to make an investment that safeguards your money and provides you with luxury as it appreciates.

Great Beginning to Many Meals

By KAY SPICER

For years cooks have debated about the proper way to cook rice — in lots of water or a little, covered or uncovered, stirred or unstirred.

However, they agree economical, versatile rice can be relied on as the base for many good meals. For half the world's population it's the chief source of food.

Rice is nutritious and easily digested. When only the husks are removed in milling, whole or brown rice is produced. Eighty per cent of it is nutrients, about eight per cent protein and 79 per cent carbohydrates. Brown rice provides vitamins of the B-complex, thiamine, niacin and riboflavin, iron and calcium. Further milling produces white rice. It also reduces its food value so people who rely on rice as the mainstay of their diet always eat brown rice.

Two varieties are popular in Canadian kitchens — short- and long-grain white rice. Actually, most rice is short unless the package states otherwise. Long-grain rice cooks more quickly and is drier and fluffier than short-grain rice. Brown rice has a nut-like flavor and requires a comparatively longer cooking time. Precooked rice is long-grain rice that has been cooked, rinsed and dried, and requires a short cooking period to moisten it and heat it through.

I've never had many problems cooking rice. For some reason I prefer long-grain rice. My family is also used to it so I have it on hand all the time. It's a staple for casserole creations. My method for its basic preparation works. Here it is:

Add 1 teaspoon salt to 2½ cups water in a heavy-bottomed saucepan which has a tight-fitting lid. For softer rice use 3 cups water. Bring water to the rapid boil. Sprinkle in 1 cup rice. Cover tightly, then reduce heat.

Cook over low heat for 18 to 20 minutes until all water is absorbed. I try not to lift the cover during this cooking period but check, if you like, to make sure you have the right saucepan. In a thin-bottomed one the rice may stick to the bottom and even scorch a little. Leaving the lid on allows the rice to steam and prevents sticking.

Fluff cooked rice with a fork after it has cooked. Rice, cooked this way, will keep in the refrigerator. It reheats easily, stir-fried in a lightly buttered pan or steamed in a covered saucepan with a few tablespoons of water over low heat.

SLICK TRICKS: For flavor variations use chicken or beef boullion, tomato juice or even apple juice as the cooking liquid for rice.

For Mushroom Rice: Saute 1 cup sliced mushrooms in 2 tablespoons butter for 5 to 6 minutes then stir into 3 cups cooked rice (1 cup uncooked).

For Rice Almondine: Saute ½ cup slivered almonds in 2 tablespoons butter until golden. Stir into 3 cups cooked rice.

HERBED RICE
(Makes 6 servings
½ cup each)

- 1 cup uncooked rice, long-grain or short-grain
- 2½ cups water (or as package directs)
- 2 cubes chicken bouillon or 2 teaspoons chicken broth mix
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon garlic salt (optional)
- ½ teaspoon rosemary
- ½ teaspoon marjoram
- ½ teaspoon thyme

Measure ingredients into a medium-size saucepan. Heat to boiling point. Stir with a fork. Cover and cook over very low heat until rice is tender and liquid absorbed — about 15 minutes or as package indicates. Serve hot as a side dish or as a base for creamed dishes such as chicken a la king.

CORNED BEEF BALLS IN RICE RING
Makes 6 servings

- 1 (12 ounce) can corned beef (unchilled)
- ½ cup fine cornflakes or bread crumbs
- 1 egg, beaten
- 2 tablespoons chopped onion
- ½ teaspoon chili powder
- Pinch garlic salt
- Freshly ground pepper
- Pinch nutmeg

Rice Ring

- 4 cups hot cooked rice (1⅓ cups uncooked)
- 1 tablespoon dried parsley flakes
- Pinch saffron (optional)
- 1 can (14 ounce) peas, drained
- 1 can (10 ounce) condensed Cheddar Cheese soup
- 2 tablespoons milk
- 1 teaspoon bottled horseradish

Prepare beef balls by first flaking the corned beef with a fork. Mix it with crumbs, egg, onion and seasonings. Shape into about 24 small balls. Arrange on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake in 375 degree F. oven about 12 minutes or until lightly browned.

Lightly grease 4-cup ring mold. Combine cooked rice with parsley, saffron and peas and press it firmly into prepared mold. Cover and keep warm in a pan of hot water or a slow oven. Heat soup with milk and horseradish in a saucepan. Unmold rice on serving platter. Fill hole in centre with meat balls and ladle cheese sauce over all.

CHEESE AND RICE SCALLOP
Makes 6 servings

- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1 medium onion, finely chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon pepper
- ½ teaspoon sweet basil
- 2 cups milk
- 4 cups cooked rice, white or brown
- 4 hard cooked eggs, shelled and sliced
- 4 medium tomatoes, sliced
- 2 cups shredded Cheddar, Edam or Gouda cheese
- Buttered bread crumbs or crushed potato chips

Melt butter in saucepan; blend in flour. Stir in onion and seasonings. Cook, stirring constantly until sauce thickens. Layer rice, egg slices, tomato slices, shredded cheese and sauce in a buttered 2-quart casserole.

Layer half the rice, half the egg slices, half the tomatoes and half the shredded cheese in a buttered 2-quart casserole. Pour over half the sauce. Repeat layering ending with sauce. Sprinkle with bread crumbs. Bake in 325 degree F. oven 35 minutes or until hot and bubbly.

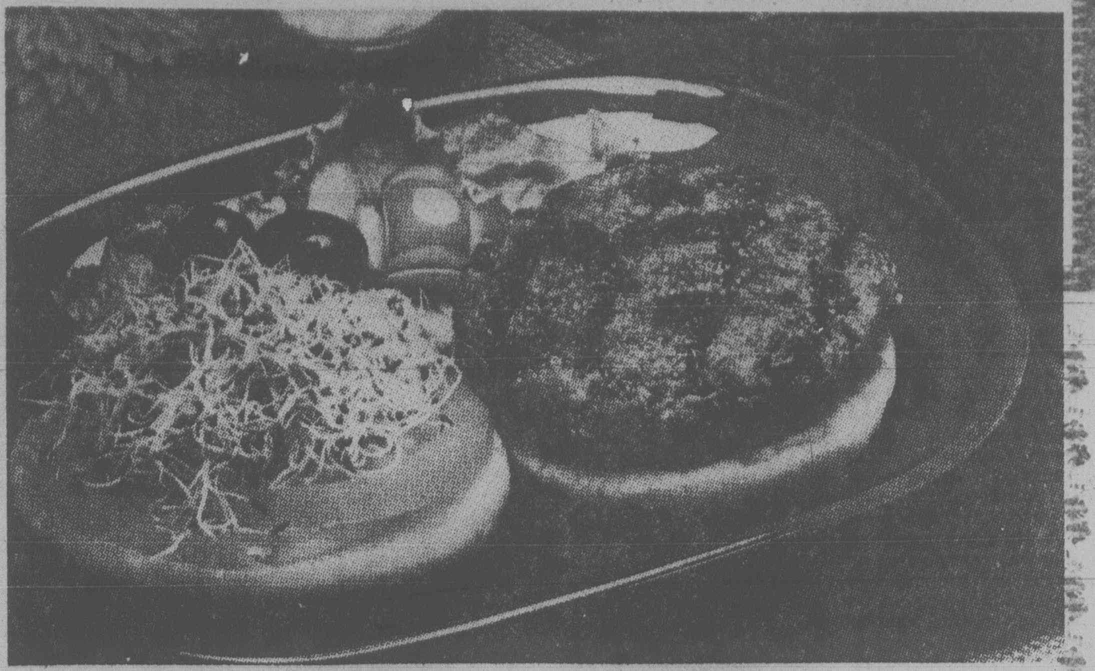
Bracing Bargain These Burgers!



Contrary to what you may think, nutritious meals don't have to be expensive. Just take a look at this recipe to see why.

Bracing burgers team ground beef with seasonings, chopped green pepper and onion, and ripe olive wedges. The burgers are then coated with wheat germ and broiled. Broiling retains the flavorful juices but gets rid of the extra fat.

More nutrition for your money? Sure. Green peppers, onions and ripe olives are a meat extender, and at the same time they add more flavor, important nutrients such as Vitamin C, and few calories. The wheat germ contributes additional vitamins, minerals, protein in dietary fibre.

So, for 1¼ pounds of ground beef you get six extra-big, extra-nutritious burgers for less money than you would spend for five regular-size plain burgers. Now that's a bargain!

Serve the burgers with tomato slices, a fluff of alfalfa sprouts, and garnish with a radish and ripe olive. Add a glass of milk to make a complete well-balanced meal that's sure to please your hamburger-loving family.

BRACING BURGERS

1½ teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
1½ teaspoons salt

1¼ pounds ground beef
¾ cup pitted ripe olives, wedged
⅓ cup green pepper, chopped
wheat germ
6 hamburger buns, split, toasted
6 tomato slices
alfalfa sprouts
6 radishes
6 ripe olives

Mix Worcestershire, salt and pepper together, then into beef. Add olives, onion and green pepper. Shape into six patties; coat with wheat germ. Broil to desired doneness. Serve each on bun with tomato and sprouts. Garnish with radish and ripe olive.

Merry-Go-Round Sauce on Chicken

To the delight of the little boys in knickers and the girls in crinolines, the carrousel was often the backdrop for a turn-of-the-century picnic in the park. Golden fried chicken, popular picnic fare then is still a favorite today.

But, just as the carrousel has changed, so too, has the preparation of fried chicken. Now it can be bought frozen, battered and fully cooked and can be stored in the freezer, until it's ready to be used. Then it's simply a matter of heat and serve.

To serve chilled, heat chicken according to packaged directions, then cool at room temperature for 15 minutes. Wrap in moisture-proof covering and refrigerate. If you're carrying chilled chicken to the park, pack it in an insulated bag to keep it cold until serving time.

Serve golden-brown, battered and fried chicken hot or cold with a zesty dip, such as Merry-Go-Round Sauce. Keep the sauce icy-cold until ready to serve.

A delightfully refreshing accompaniment for fried chicken is Beans & Macaroni Mix. It's a salad that's a new combination of two traditional picnic favorites — beans & pork with tomato sauce and cooked macaroni — tossed with crunchy celery, radishes and olives, sprinkled with seasonings and chilled.

FRIED CHICKEN WITH MERRY-GO-ROUND SAUCE
(Serves 6)

1 package (28 ounces) frozen, battered, cooked fried chicken
½ cup sour cream
3 tablespoons ketchup
⅛ teaspoon Worchestershire

Heat chicken according to package directions. To make sauce in bowl, combine remaining ingredients; chill. Serve as dipping sauce with fried chicken.

To serve chicken cold: Heat chicken according to package directions; cool at room temperature for 15 minutes. Wrap in moisture-proof covering; refrigerate. Serve with dipping sauce.

BEANS & MACARONI MIX
(Serves 6)

1 can (16 ounces) beans & Pork with tomato sauce
2 cups cooked elbow macaroni
1 cup celery, diagonally sliced
½ cup sliced radishes
2 tablespoons chopped onion
3 tsblespoons salad oil
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 teaspoon garlic salt dash pepper

In large bowl, combine ingredients. Chill 4 hours or more; stir occasionally.

Serve on salad greens.

Revlon Sued Over Lotion

NEW YORK (CP) — A United States woman has launched a $5-million suit against Revlon, Inc., claiming that she suffered mercury poisoning following two decades of using Esoterica, a skin lotion which contained ammoniated mercury until the formula was changed in 1972. The lotion originally was made by Mitchum Co., but Revlon acquired the cream when it bought out Mitchum in 1970. Revlon already has paid about $500,000 in out-of-court settlements for similar claims by two women.

Right Tools Make Metric a Breeze

A cheerful note for homemakers worried about — or feeling defeated by — the new metric measurements in recipes: Don't try to convert to the old cup and spoon measurements.

I find the problem disappears when you have the new standard 250 ml (cup) measure and the collection of five (spoon-type) measures; sizes are 1, 2, 5, 15 and 25 ml.

With these new standard measuring tools, the metric recipe is followed as printed, just as you have been doing with the previous recipes with the old standards. You are still free to cut amounts to suit your need for less sugar, less fat and less flavorings or seasonings, and to substitute different flour types.

When you make a dish from an older non-metric recipe, use the old-type cup measure and the old set of measuring spoons. Always store the cup and spoons together to avoid time loss in locating when needed. Use the same system with the new metric set. But have only the one set out at one time to avoid confusion.

As the metric measurements are used more frequently, you will be surprised how familiar the amounts become. In no time you know what 500 ml of flour looks like in your bowl, and whether you think the 250 ml of margarine is more than you care to use for that quantity of flour to make cookie squares. Before you realize it, you begin to think metric measurements even when using the old type measures.

A tip about the metric measuring spoons: I have found them so far only in stainless metal, the set of five on one small metal ring. They are rather awkward to handle, so I replaced the metal ring with a thick soft piece of cotton string. Now the spoons are easily handled though they are not separated from the string.

This has the advantage of not getting a spoon or two misplaced while working with them.

From the new publication of B.C. Ministry of Agriculture and Beautiful B.C. magazine, here is a metric recipe for Fraser Filbert Squares — a cookie sort of thing for brown-bag lunches and lunch boxes. Obviously there are B.C. agricultural products included such as flour, butter, eggs and the filberts.

You may want to make changes as I did when making up the recipe but no problems were met and the results were very crisp, good squares to add to the metric recipe file under Cookies, Squares, Bars.

You, too, will like them. They have a lovely taste. I had to use brown sugar instead of icing sugar as none was in my cupboard.

Fraser Filbert Squares

250 ml flour (I used whole-wheat flour)
125 ml soft butter
50 ml icing sugar
2 eggs, beaten
200 ml brown sugar (I cut this to 75 ml)
125 ml rolled oats (used oat flakes)
1 ml salt
2 mL baking powder
5 ml vanilla (omitted)
250 ml chopped filberts

The nuts, oat flakes and sugar gave plentiful flavor without the vanilla. Try it this way.

In the mixing bowl, cream flour, butter and icing sugar. Press onto bottom of a 2-litre, square (eight-inch) baking pan (or one of similar size; it may be rectangular but the same capacity).

Return to oven (at same temperature); bake 10 to 12 minutes until topping is firm. Cool; cut into squares. (Makes 16 squares.)

Use only your new metric set of measures when making this recipe. I'll guarantee you will be pleased you did, for it frees you from frustration when looking at recipes in metric.

This square will become a favorite; use ground peanuts if more convenient. If nuts are salted, omit the salt in the recipe.

At the same baking period, make another small batch of squares using your old measuring tools.

These are fancy little fine-textured orange cake squares for occasional use. I imagine the calory count is high, though with the eggs, oranges and rice polishings there is plentiful nutrition, too.

Orange Cake Squares

4 small eggs, yolks and whites separated
¼ cup brown sugar
2 small oranges, juice and some rind grated
1 cup rice polishings
¼ tsp salt
¼ cup brown sugar (2nd amount)
1 Tbsp hot water
1 small lemon, juice and pulp

In the same mixing bowl used for previous squares, separate yolks from egg whites — emptying whites into clean small bowl.

Beat eggs yolks; add sugar and beat with fork until thick. Measure in rice polishings and salt; mix, add orange juice and rind.

Beat egg whites with whisk until stiff; fold into batter. Pour into a greased 8 by 8-inch baking pan or glass baking dish.

Bake at moderate 177° C. for about 25 minutes or until light brown and cake is set. Cool for 5 minutes. Bring ¼ cup sugar, hot water and lemon juice to boil and simmer one minute.

Drizzle over warm cake. Let cool before serving. (Makes 16 squares.)

The rice polishings make an unusually tender textured cake. Experiment with other cake recipes by substituting part of this nutritious flour for part of the refined white flour in a recipe.

Once you start following a metric recipe or two, you feel more adventurous. New Canadian cookbooks appearing from now on are sure to be in metric measurements.

With our metric kitchen tools handy and familiar to us, we shall have no problems in acquiring new recipes. Yet we can still delve into our old recipe files for a Canadian old-timer and make a complete dinner with the help of our heirloom set of cup and measuring spoons.

Our good food will taste the same, and we will no longer need to feel inhibited by refusing to make use of new recipes coming up in the future.

Learned the hard way: Screw-on tops for opened glue tubes and bottles won't stick if you rub petroleum jelly around the screw threads. And when you want a brass screw driven into wood, use a steel screw the exact size to make the hole for the brass screw. The steel screw is harder and the slot won't break down the way the slot in a softer brass screw will.

Primer for Basic Fish Dishes

By PIERRE FRANEY
New York Times

Curiously, home cooks seem to find fish to be the most complicated of foods to cook.

It isn't, although more exercise must be used in preparing it because it can be overcooked in seconds. I have often been asked to give recipes for the basic techniques of cooking fish, and they are included in this column. In a sense this might be considered a primer for the basic fish dishes, but that by no means implies a lack of sophistication. Some of the simplest dishes can be foods for the gods.

The techniques and recipes offered here include a plain broiled fish in which fish fillets are simply turned in butter, seasoned and placed under the broiler for from two to eight minutes, with no turning required.

The cooking time will depend on the thickness of the fish. There is also a basic recipe for cooking fish in a skillet. The dish is simply bathed briefly in milk, coated with flour and cooked hastily over moderately high heat, turning once.

Remember, in any of these, simply choose a fresh fish and take care not to overcook it.

PLAIN BROILED FISH

4 skinless, boneless fish fillets, about 1¼ lbs. (flounder, sole or cod will do)
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tblsp. butter
¼ tsp. paprika

1. Preheat the broiler to high.

2. Sprinkle the fish with salt and pepper to taste. Set aside.

3. Select a heatproof serving dish large enough to hold the fish in one layer and add the butter. Heat under the broiler until the butter melts.

4. Add the fish fillets and turn them in it to coat in the butter. When ready for the broiling, leave the fish pieces skinned side down. Hold a small sieve over the fish and add the paprika. Sprinkle the paprika over the fish and place under the broiler, about five inches from the source of heat. The cooking time will depend on the thickness of the fish. A very thin fish fillet such as that of a small flounder will cook in two to four minutes. A one-inch thick slice of boneless, skinless cod will require eight minutes.

Yield: 4 servings.

BASIC SAUTE OF FISH

4 skinless, boneless fish fillets, about 1¼ lbs. (flounder, sole, cod)
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
3 tblsp. milk
¼ cup flour
¼ cup peanut, vegetable or corn oil
4 tblsp. butter
Juice of half a lemon
4 slices lemon
2 tblsp. finely chopped parsley

1. Sprinkle the fish fillets with salt and pepper to taste.

2. Pour the milk into a flat dish.

3. Dip the fillets in the milk and then dredge in flour, shaking to remove excess.

4. Heat the oil in a skillet large enough to hold the fillets in one layer. Add the pieces of fish and cook about one and one-half minutes or longer until golden brown on one side. The fish should be cooked over a fairly high or moderately high heat. It must cook fast.

5. Turn the pieces of fish and cook until golden brown on the other side, from one to two minutes.

6. Transfer the fish to a serving dish and pour off the fat from the skillet.

7. Add the butter to the wiped-out skillet and cook over moderately high heat until the butter is foamy and then starts to brown. Add the lemon juice. Pour this over the fish. Garnish each piece of fish with a slice of lemon and chopped parsley.

Yield: 4 servings.

Flour Bit Off? Here Are Tips

Under normal storage conditions, the shelf life of wheat flour (white) is about one year from the time it is milled from the wheat kernels. The shelf life of wholewheat flour is about three months.

It is difficult to tell if flour is out of condition (poor baking quality) from long storage. Mustiness will indicate poor condition but if this is not evident, baking will determine condition of flour, i.e. bread dough is short and tough and the baked loaf will be small and rough.

Flour should be kept in a clean, airtight container and stored in a cool dry place.

When flour is stored too close to heat it can lose some of its natural moisture to the air. "Dry" flour acts like a sponge, absorbing more than the normal amount of liquid from the batter or dough, to make up for the lost moisture. If this occurs, add more of the liquid called for in the recipe . . . a little at a time . . . until the desired consistency returns.

In humid weather, flour may pick up extra moisture which will cause unusually soft, sticky doughs. To adjust for a soft dough, add more flour . . . a little at a time . . . until dough returns to normal.

Flour can be frozen for long-term storage if carefully wrapped in moisture-vapor-proof material.

Freezing is especially helpful for dark flours (wholewheat, graham) which contain the oil-rich germ of the wheat kernel that can become rancid if improperly stored.

Food pests are a fact of life . . . but the Canadian food industry has one of the best records in the world for keeping food free from contamination.

There are several possible points of contamination of flour. The first is the flour mill which can receive infested grain. Fumigation, which is practised extensively in flour mills, and sifting of the flour will kill all insects.

The biggest source of contamination is not the flour itself, so much, as other slow moving items stored near the flour, at the warehouse level, retail level or in the home.

Trace Elements Unmasked

By JANE E. BRODY

There is probably no aspect of human nutritional needs that is less well understood and appreciated than the so-called micronutrients, or trace elements.

These are substances that the body requires in tiny amounts to maintain normal health and growth, but which can be deadly poisons if consumed in large doses.

Many people misunderstand this delicate balance and mistakenly assume that if a substance is harmful in large doses, small doses taken over along period of time may also be poisonous. Others make the opposite, equally incorrect assumption that if a small amount of a substance is good for you, more of it must be better.

As a result, claims have been made that large doses of one or another micronutrient may cure or prevent various diseases, including cancer. While there is some evidence to support such claims, all the important facts are not yet in and the risk of overdosing oneself with a poisonous substance is always present.

The best known micronutrient is iron. Dietary shortages of iron represent the most widespread nutritional deficiency. Iron deficiency, a frequent cause of anemia, most commonly affects infants, young children, adolescents and women of childbearing age. Such persons may need to take iron supplements to avert a shortage of this essential nutrient.

In addition to iron, the human body also requires trace amounts of copper, iodine, zinc, flourine, chromium and, animal and other evidence suggests, cobalt, manganese, molybdenum, selenium, nickel, tin, vanadium and silicon as well.

Although deficiencies of some of these have never been demonstrated in human beings, dietary shortages of others sometimes occur that may compromise health.

Following ia a description of the known and suspected roles of the major trace elements, the foods that contain them in substantial amounts, and the hazards of overdoses.

COPPER: All mammals require small amounts of copper, an element that can be a deadly poison in large quantities. Copper is an essential ingredient of several respiratory enzymes and is needed for the development of young red blood cells.

Deficiency of copper in mammals' leads to such problems as anemia, faulty development of bone and nervous tissue, loss of elasticity in the tendons and the major arteries (possibly leading to rupture of the blood vessels), abnormal development of the lung's air sacs (possibly predisposing to emphysema) and abnormal pigmentation and structure of the hair.

No specific level of copper required in the diet has been set, but most diets far exceed needed amounts. The richest dietary sources of copper are nuts, cocoa powder, beef and pork liver, kidney, raisins, dried beans, bran flakes and some shellfish.

Milk is very low in copper, but the human infant is born with enough copper to last until other foods are consumed. However, premature infants fed cow's milk exclusively for two to three months may develop a copper deficiency. In adults, even during prolonged malnutrition, a copper deficiency does not develop.

IODINE: Iodine is an integral part of two important thyroid hormones that regulage metabolism. Deficiency leads to a shortage of thyroid hormones and goitre, an enlargement of the thyroid gland. If the deficiency occurs before or shortly after birth, it may result in cretinism. Iodine is also essential for normal reproduction.

The national Academy of Sciences has established a daily recommended dietary allowance for adults of between 100 and 140 micrograms, depending on age and sex. Growing children and pregnant and nursing women may need proportionately greater amounts.

Except for seafood and seaweed, most foods contain precious little iodine. Iodine is added to salt (iodized salt) to help prevent goitre in people living where little seafood is consumed and the soil is deficient in iodine. The academy recommends that everyone use iodized salt in the home, regardless of where he lives.

ZINC: This element is essential to plants, animals and man. It is a constituent of nearly 100 human enzymes involved in major metabolic processes. Deficiency causes loss of appetite and failure to grow. Prenatal zinc deficiency may adversely affect the maturation of the brain and behavior later in life.

Soils in many areas contain very little zinc and some North Americans may be marginally deficient in this element.

Such people experience more rapid wound healing and improved taste sensitivity when zinc is added to their diet. Otherwise-healthy children in Denver were found to have impaired taste, poor appetites and less than mornal growth as a result of a zinc deficiency.

The recommended daily allowance is three milligrams during the first six months of life, 10 milligrams for children, and 15 milligrams for adults, with an extra 5 milligrams during pregnancy and an extra 10 milligrams when nursing.

The best way to get enough zinc is to eat a varied diet containing animal protein. Meat, liver, eggs and seafood are good sources, followed by milk and whole grain products. Diets that depend heavily on grains, which contan large amounts of phytates that block absorption of zinc, may result in a deficiency.

However, the zinc supplements sold in health food stores are unnecessary except in a few rare conditions, including a hereditary disorder called acrodermatitis enteropathica and patients who are fed entirely by vein. As a drug, zinc sulfate may be an effective treatment for acne. However, as little as one 220-milligram capsule can cause nausea and vomiting. Other toxic effects of excess zinc include abdominal pain, fever and severe anemia.

FLUORINE: Small amounts of fluorine, starting before birth and continuing throughout life, are essential for the formation of strong, decay-resistant teeth. This element may also help to prevent the breakdown of bone that is common with aging.

Food sources of fluorine include fish, tea and most animal foods, and plants grown in areas where fluoride (the salt of fluorine) is present in water. Drinking water is a good source of fluoride in some areas of the country; in others, low levels of fluoride are added to the water to protect teeth. But many communities still lack fluoridated water because of vehement opposition from small groups of people who regard it as a poison.

Indeed, at high doses, fluorine is toxic just like the other trace elements. However, toxic effects, such as mottling of the teeth, do not appear except after daily intake for many years of amounts far above those commonly consumed.

CHROMIUM: This element is needed to maintain normal metabolism of glucose (blood sugar). Some persons, particularly the elderly, pregnant women and malnourished persons, may not consume adequate amounts of chromium. Only a small amount of dietary chromium is absorbed by the body. Meat, cheese, whole grain products (chromium is lost during processing), dried beans, peanuts and brewer's yeast are good sources of chromium.

No daily requirement for this element has been established thus far.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I was disappointed in your advice to carry no wedding gifts to the reception. You said gifts sould be sent to the bride's home before the wedding or to the couple's home afterwards so as not to be a problem for the bride's mother, who already had enough on her mind.

You also said it was a pain in the neck to have to haul a carload of wedding presents home. Boy, I should have had such a pain in the neck. — J.

DEAR J.: Although the mail has been running 2 to 1 in your favor and against me, here's one for my side:

DEAR ABBY: Let me add a loud "Amen" to your opinion that taking wedding gifts to the reception is very inconsiderate. I recently married off a daughter, and of the gifts that were brought to the reception, many mysteriously disappeared — having been either lost or stolen. Some were broken when I got them home, and many cards were lost and mixed up.

Abby, please keep repeating your advice to send the wedding gifts to the bride before the wedding, or to the couple afterward. — POST-MARITAL HEADACHE

DEAR ABBY: I was jogging the other morning and when I came to an intersection (not a particularly busy one) a passing motorist leaned out his window and yelled, "Hey, you jerk, get of the street! What are you trying to prove?"

I ignored him and kept right on jogging.

Abby, this wasn't the first time I've been insulted by a hostile motorist. Other joggers tell me they've had the same experience.

What do you think motivates these people to put down joggers? — KEEPING FIT

DEAR KEEPING: Jelousy, probably

DEAR ABBY: On Valentine's Day the gentleman I've been dating gave me a bottle of perfume in my favorite fragrance. He also took me to dinner and presented me with a beautiful orchid corsage. Then he spoiled it all by handing me a $100 gift certificate.

I tried not to show my shock and disappointment, but I still haven't been able to bring myself to cash it. Should I drop him? — INSULTED

DEAR INSULTED: I can't see any reason that you should be shocked, disapointed, or insulted. But if you decide to drop this gentleman, let me know where you drop him. I know several women who would love to meet him.

THE SHAPE OF THINGS TO COME IN TV is here now at VICTORIA CABLEVISION

AN EARTH RECEIVING STATION, the first in local TV, went into operation at 4 p.m. Thursday, March 8, on the roof at Victoria Cablevision Ltd., 3690 Shelbourne, in a joint venture of the Canadian Cable TV Association and the CBC linking much of Canada to the Anik communications satellite. And there's more to come.

NOW YOU CAN SEE the House of Commons live from Ottawa via satellite on the Victoria Cablevision Midband service's Channel G (20) if you have a converter, set accessory or built-in tuner. And in the not too distant future, the half-ton dish 12 feet across will bring you much more.

A CHILDREN'S CHANNEL may be next — and then, in the 1980's, many exciting new services could follow in Midband and Superband. Pay TV is only one of numerous possibilities. Most will be viewed with the aid of easy to operate push-button converters — find out about Midband and converters and get a free in-home demonstration by phoning

Lupus Rare . . . Cause Unknown

By L. L. Coleman, MD

I have a skin rash which has been diagnosed as lupus. The doctors have treated it only with cortisone ointment and they advise me to stay out of the sun completely. Evidently, lupus is a rare condition and information on it seems to be scarce. I would like to learn more. — Mrs. E.H.D.

Dear Mrs. E.H.D.: Lupus erythematosus is an unusual condition whose cause is unknown. Ninety per cent of the cases occur in females. One of the characteristic signs is a butterfly-shaped redness on the face. The condition is too complex for the layman to get a real grasp of it.

The treatment is individualized and depends entirely on the location and the severity of the condition. The use of cortisone and its modifications is still the mainstay of treatment. Other anti-inflammatory agents are also used, depending on the exact nature of the symptoms.

The most important contribution you can make to the state of your health is to continue under the supervision of your doctors.

Plans are being formulated to run a high voltage electric power line through our area. Do these high voltage lines have any effect on the health of people in the vicinity? — Mr. E.F.A.

Dear Mr. A.: There are no radiations from high voltage lines that can possibly affect the health of the community. Government agencies are very strict about laying such lines, either overhead or underground, to be sure that no possible contact can be made with them.

In areas where there is any possible chance of such contact, the most exact precautionary warning signs are placed.

In a period of six months I've had approximately 20 sties in both of my eyes. What causes them and what can be done to prevent them? I've been given eye ointments and eye drops, but they still keep coming. I've been told by friends that the main cause could be a blood condition. Is this so? — Ms. L.K.O.

Dear Ms. O.: Your kind, solicitous friends are wrong in suggesting that the "main cause" could be a blood condition. If this seemed to be a possibility, your doctors would have ordered blood studies.

At the edge of the eyelids there is a row of tiny glands. Each one manufactures droplets of oil which coat the lid's margin. Sometimes the duct, or opening, of one of these oil glands becomes blocked and the oil has no outlet. Because the trapped oil becomes stagnant it may sometimes become infected. This is known as a "chalazion" which can be confused with a sty.

Actually, a sty is an infection at one of the roots of the eyelashes. Good eye hygiene, avoiding irritation with cosmetics and inquiry into the possibility of an allergy are recommended.

Perennial Spring Delights

GARDENING
hilda beastall

Appearing on plant stands at nurseries and outdoor garden shops are a number of usefully beautiful perennial plants already showing the colorful growth for which we admire them in the early spring garden.

As a brief list you may find Polyanthuses, Pansies and Violas, Pulsatilla vulgaris, Pulmonaria officinalis, the May Hostas, and Bergenia cordifolia.

Plants hardy enough to flower from the last days of March through to the warmer days of May are, indeed, a blessing to gardeners who haven't had the opportunity, or perhaps the space, to grow an assortment of spring bulbs.

Pansies and Violas are favorites over the years and can now be planted in flower and bud in soil which is workable. Polyanthuses are also seen in bloom in an assortment of colors to complement the pansies.

Prepare the soil with compost or old manure worked into the top few inches, for these are not deeply rooting plants. The dappled shade of leafless trees is ideal at present; later they benefit from moving sun and shade as the weather warms and tree leaves expand.

A handsome purple-and-gold flower bearing its regal bloom on five-inch furry stems is known to prairie dwellers as the Prairie Crocus.

Perhaps others know it as the Pasque-flower, the name referring to the Feast of the Passover at Easter. Botanically, you will find it as Pulsatilla vulgaris. Under any name it is a beautiful addition to a sunny garden where it will soon have seedling offspring, if left undisturbed.

Pulmonaria officinalis (with many fancy common names such as Lungwort and Lords-and-Ladies) flowers and grows best in a shady spot where it bears clusters of pink and blue flowers on four-inch stems. By April, the silver-mottled leaves to six-inch length become the ornamental feature for the remainder of the year.

Companion plants for shady-place flowers are the vast array of Hostas which confuse us when referred to by their many common names. You may have heard of Funkia, Plantainlily, Corfulily; these are all Hostas, a long living perennial whose ornamental leaves are splendid for giving both color and light to ground level areas when grown in dappled shade. They will also do well in a spot where no sun reaches as long as there is air space above.

Indeed, all those mentioned are suited not only to shaded or sunny places in the conventional garden but also to similar positions in patio beds, balcony gardens or at the edges of woodland gardens.

The toughest of all the early perennial plants is the Bergenia cordifolia, the spring flowering lovely with the huge smooth green leaves and stout stems of rich pink jewel-like flowers, so tightly clustered that they cannot be counted.

In sheltered gardens where hard frost rarely dwells, the handsome leaves remain in good condition all winter. This is a plant which likes a slope with rough soil in the sun, or it will thrive among rocks if the soil pocket can be first prepared for it roots to get a hold. Bergenia likes sun but shade for part of the day is accepted; the tough, thongy roots which develop with age spread along the surface to expand the planting so don't interplant with small treasures. This is a plant to be seen in masses.

All plants mentioned in this article are perennial, some more so than others. Pansies and violas reappear each year if well-cared-for. All need care with watering during summer to ensure their reappearance in future years to improve the early spring garden.

Test Delay On Laetrile

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Cancer Institute is delaying Laetrile experimentation with advanced cancer patients because the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has not yet approved the plan. Such approval is a prerequisite for testing any experimental drug on humans in the United States.

Last September the institute announced plans for a six-month test of Laetrile on humans with untreatable tumors. It asked the FDA for permission in December and normally would have received an answer in 30 days.

But FDA spokesman Wayne Pines said Tuesday, "We are still in the process of evaluating their investigational new drug application." He said the main questions involved chemistry.

"We're trying to work with them on the exact substance they want to test, its quality, stability and purity," Pines said.

Dr. Jane Hanney of the institute's cancer treatment division said some agency officials and others have expressed concern that Laetrile could poison patients. It is made from apricot pits containing cyanide.

A committee of institute experts voted 14-11 last Sept. 27 to proceed with the human experiments at several research sites. Dr. Arthur Upton, institute director, said the study was justified not because of any evidence that Laetrile can cure cancer, but to settle "once and for all" the debate about it.

The institute appealed 14 months ago for records from patients who felt Laetrile helped them. It got 93 responses, but only 22 included all the necessary records and involved patients who used only Laetrile. Of these, the experts reported that six showed improvement.

The FDA has banned interstate shipments of Laetrile because it has not been proven safe and effective. But 17 states have legalized its use.

A federal appeals court in Denver ruled last year that the government's safety and efficacy requirements don't apply to the dying.

BIG MONEY is changing hands out on commercial herring fishery as frantic buyers pay cold, hard cash for catches but fishing on the Gorge is strictly for fun and a catch of a dozen herring is reward enough for anglers like these. The regulars say there's nothing quite so relaxing as a lazy day in the sunshine and a chance to catch a tasty supper. Gear is simple, no boat is required.

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

The federal taxman plans to zero in on the multi-million dollar cash-for-fish caper underway in the herring roe fishing industry on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

In the fierce buying war some processors are carrying as much as half a million dollars in cash to pay for the catches on the fishing grounds.

Betty Newton, a spokesman for the tax department in Victoria said today there is growing concern over the records — or the lack thereof — fishermen keep on their transactions.

"Most fishermen keep some records but they are not as detailed as we would like," she said.

"Often there is no way the records show an explicit identification for each catch and transaction."

She said federal tax auditors are looking into the problem but she wouldn't elaborate.

"Supposedly when a person is handling so much cash he should carry a receipt book . . . if only for his own protection," she said.

However, cash transactions are commonplace in the industry and are often completed without the exchange of receipts.

Stuart Shelley, vice president of production for B.C. Packers said some large vessels are forced to carry $300,000 to $500,000 cash on board.

Even a smaller, 50-ton packer normally has to carry about $150,000 to purchase the roe which has soared in price this year to as much as $3,500 a ton, he said.

The amount of cash floating about has posed a security problem but there have been no incidents to date.

Said Insp. Marv Young of the RCMP headquarters staff in Victoria: "With the attention the fleet is get-

Textiles Gouging Charged

OTTAWA (CP) — Clothing makers say textile factories are taking advantage of import quotas and the lower value of the Canadian dollar to jack up prices that will have to be passed on to consumers.

The country's 2,300 clothing manufacturers already are forced to pay higher prices for the fabric and yarn they import from abroad because of the lower value of the dollar.

But they say Canadian textile factories, which supply about half their needs, have reacted to higher foreign prices by raising their own prices at home.

The price of polyester-cotton yarn from Japan, for example, has risen from 72 cents a yard in the fall of 1977 to $1.30 a yard because of the decline of the dollar relative to the Japanese yen.

The price of the same Canadian-made fabric has gone from 72 cents to $1.20 in the same period.

Peter Clark, executive-director of the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute, says there are also complaints that textile factories have raised prices to clothing makers after orders have been placed.

To add to the price increase problem Finance Minister Jean Chretien lessened the competition from abroad even more by quietly imposing new textile import quotas Jan. 1 that will restrict imports from low-cost countries in the Far East.

"They were introduced as a result of pressure from the textile industry," said Clark.

There were no public hearings on the quotas as there were on extensive import quotas for clothing imposed in 1976.

The textile and clothing quotas — known as "voluntary export restraints" — were negotiated with low-cost countries such as Taiwan, South Korea and China because of complaints from domestic manufacturers they were being hurt by imports.

But Clark says it is the textile manufacturers themselves who have been im-

Secret Data Second Hand

OTTAWA (CP) — Confidential Statistics Canada documents were discovered by a defence department employee in a filing cabinet he purchased from a used furniture store, according to the Ottawa Journal.

Twelve file folders, stamped confidential, contained the results of a 1973 national survey on the production of a wide range of manufactured goods — everything from airplane parts to pharmaceuticals, the newspaper says.

It is the second time in two months that secret Statistics Canada documents have been discovered in somewhat less than secret circumstances.

Progressive Conservative MP Elmer MacKay said last month that thousands of confidential forms, including income tax returns, were lying unattended in cardboard boxes in the basement storeroom of a government building. Any one could have walked off the street and read the tax forms, the MP said.

In the latest incident, the defence department employee gave the documents to The Journal because he was "upset and concerned" about a lack of security, the newspaper says.

Individual companies are not identified in the material described as work sheets by Guy Leclerc, assistant chief statistician.

"There may have been a little bit of neglect" in disposal of the material, which "should have gone to the shredder," Leclerc said.

Peace Pact Signed Next Week: Egypt

Times News Services

The Israeli cabinet today approved without dissent U.S. President Jimmy Carter's compromise proposals for a Middle East peace treaty, and Egypt's prime minister exultantly predicted the historic pact could be signed in Washington next week.

The cabinet voted 15-0 for the proposals with one abstention and one absence, cabinet sources said.

Education Minister Zvulun Hammer abstained from the voting and Transport Minister Haim Landau was absent. Both are hardliners who have opposed the treaty provisions and favor widespread Jewish settlement in the occupied Arab territories.

Another cabinet meeting will be held Sunday for appoval of the treaty document as a whole, but that was viewed as only a formality.

"The American proposals are possible to live with. Otherwise the government would not have accepted them," Minister-Without-Portfolio Moshe Nissim said.

Begin told reporters after today's meeting that he telephoned Carter and informed him of his ministers' decision.

"I informed him that the last two outstanding issues were resolved today by a positive decision of the cabinet," he said. "The president was very glad to receive this information."

Begin, 65, then excused himself and said he had to go home "to have some rest."

In Washington Carter said he was "extremely pleased" with the cabinet decision.

"This means that all of the outstanding issues ... have now been successfully resolved."

Carter had returned to Washington in triumph early today after his Middle East peace mission, and said, "I believe that God has answered out prayers."

Police Recover $3M Emerald

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police have recovered a $3 million emerald stolen in August, 1977, from a gem museum in Idar-Oberstein, West Germany.

Inspector Keith Dane of the RCMP commercial crime squad said a Vancouver-based gang of international jewel thieves turned over the 59-carat emerald late Monday through an intermediary.

Dane said an international network of police forces traced the thieves here but were unable to obtain enough evidence to lay charges.

"Eventually, direct approaches were made to a number of known criminals and after lengthy discussions to intermediaries the gem was turned back to police."

Dane said the gang comprises at least five criminals who have served time in British Columbia for theft offences.

Dane said he suspected the thieves turned over the emerald because they were unable to sell it.

Unemployed Man, 47 Firebombing Suspect

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 47-year-old unemployed man was in police custody today after he was arrested near the scene of the city's 22nd firebombing. But police refused to say if it is a breakthrough in the frustrating case.

Police, aided by two citizen's band operators, arrested a man shortly after a Molotov cocktail was thrown through the window of a downtown Canada Manpower office at 3:20 a.m.

Mirroring previous incidents, a brick was used to break the window. The arrested man was walking near the office .

Police have not yet charged the man — a resident of the city's east end — but said charges probably will be laid later today.

To date, 10 financial institutions, six government offices and six other buildings have been hit by firebombs.

Two men were arrested and charged recently for allegedly taking part in one bombing but the attacks continued.

The two men who stopped the man today were members of the Vancouver Community Alert Patrol who were involved in stakeouts of premises which were potential targets of attacks.

Earlier today, the door of the Akali Singh Sikh temple in east-end Vancouver was damaged by fire shortly after 1 a.m. but police are treating that as an arson.

Jet Crashes In Peking

TOKYO AP) — A British-built Trident aircraft crashed in the western outskirts of Peking and 200 persons were believed to have been killed, Japan's Kyodo News Service reported today from the Chinese capital.

Kyodo quoted witnesses as saying that the aircraft crashed into a factory near an airport shortly after take off.

No information was available as to how many of the victims were aboard the plane or whether some of the dead might have been on the ground or in the factory.

Kyodo attributed its report to Western reporters, who, it said, happened to be in the area of the crash.

China's official media, as monitored in Tokyo, made no mention of the crash.

The Tridents are used by CAAC, the Civial Aviation Administration of China, which serves as China's national and international airline.

The British-built plane is able to carry between 115 and 180 passengers depending upon its design, according to the 1979 edition of Jane's All the World's Aircraft.

Meanwhile, in Qatar, a Jordanian jetliner crashed while trying to land at Doha during a rainstorm early today, killing 45 of the 64 persons on board, officials said.

The Qatar government news agency said the 49 passengers included several Europeans and Americans, but airport sources said two Britons were the only non-Arabs among the 19 survivors.

One of the survivors, a woman, was reported in serious condition

Nineteen Quakes Hit Mexico

Times News Services

MEXICO CITY — A major pre-dawn earthquake and 18 aftershocks jolted vast areas of Mexico today killing one person and destroying buildings in the capital.

The Red Cross said 32 Mexicans were injured in the quake that was felt from near the U.S. border to the southern mountains.

The Seismological Institute in Mexico City registered the tremor at 7.0 on the open-ended Richter scale and put the epicenter 315 kilometres southwest of the capital city, near the Pacific resort of Acapulco. Aftershocks registering as high as 5 on the scale continued for four hours.

The National Earthquake Centre in Golden, Colo., measured the quake at 7.9. That reading would make the quake the world's strongest this year.

Power to two-thirds of the capital city of 13 million was cut for up to four hours. The subway system, which has its own power grid, was stopped for about 15 minutes. The quake hit at 5:08 a.m.

The Red Cross said 21 of the injured were in Mexico City, one was in Chipancingo, inland from Acapulco, and 10 were in the coastal resort town of Zihuatanejo, about 40 km from the epicentre. The fatality, a 14-year-old girl, was hit by debris from a building in the capital.

At the Ibero-American University in southern Mexico City a three- storey administrative and classroom building collapsed. collapsed.

A bank building on Juarez Street in the heart of the city was badly damaged. Several floors of the building appeared to have collapsed.

Many windows shattered and streets and sidewalks were covered with large shards of glass.

About one hour after the main shock, a secondary tremor rumbled through the city, swaying buildings and sending tourists pouring back into the streets from their hotels.

Two hours before the first Mexican quake, a minor tremblor measuring about 3.8 on the Richter scale hit the Anchorage area.

Nobody Can Find Key To Magic Circle Puzzle

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

Greater Victoria municipalities have saved some of their historic houses but have failed to preserve the prehistoric burial cairns and mysterious magic stone circles which once dotted the area.

Gone are more than two hundred cairns and circles which once graced the slopes of Cadboro Bay and Uplands Park.

Homes now occupy many of the the ancient sites around the bay while in the park most of the boulders which marked the cairns have been scattered or removed.

Most of the monuments also have vanished from Central and North Saanich.

At the turn of the century the cairns and the circles of rocks were a major attraction. Their origin, then as now, is a mystery.

Don Abbott, curator of the Provincial Museum archeology department, says the best place to see the cairns and circles is on the Department of National Defence property at Rocky Point where they are protected.

There are more than 150 in one area and they line up east to west with a magic circle in East Sooke Park.

Most of the stone monuments were not destroyed deliberately, Abbott said, but removed by people unaware of their significance.

Burial cairns differ in size and shape, but are usually three to six feet in diameter. The stones are placed around the burial sites. In others, the stones are laid in a square.

The stone circles seem to have had something to do with ancient rituals. Some were on the top of hills or mountains, such as Mount Newton. Stone bowls have been found been near the sites.

Present-day natives seem to know nothing about the origin of the cairns and circles but there is evidence Indians used the circles as as a source of power.

Abbott has no idea of the origin of the circles but has a hunch the cairns were built within the last 1,000 years.

Other experts think the circles and cairns originated with a nomadic people who came to B.C. three or four thousand years ago, and were replaced or assimilated by the natives. Some continued to make use of the circles. A few may have kept up the practice of building the cairns.

The circles, also found on the mainland and Gulf Islands, have intrigued many people. Some have even reported psychic experiences while walking alone in the vicinity of them.

There seems little doubt that Indians used the circles as a source of power or to communicate with spirits. A person had to be alone, and apparently some even slept on the sites.

The circle which once existed on Mount Newton probably was used for puberty rites.

The museum has the account of an elderly Indian, who as a boy of 12, was sent to the circle. He was instructed to bath in a pond and stay the night.

"As I looked around after my second bath I heard a loud whirring above my head, and many leaves floated down to the ground at my feet. Looking up, I saw a giant bird . . . the Thunderbird itself . . . soaring in the sky . . ."

Some believe the ancient sages or medicine men, as they were called in North America, used the circles for practising astrology.

But the problem with attempting to interpret prehistoric monuments is that their builders held a different view of life and the universe. The earth was a living organism — not a dead body. The spirit was life expressed in man, plants birds, animals, fish and even minerals.

Concern is the strongest feeling that beams through when you meet Dr. Eugene Kaellis.

Best known perhaps as the Cool Aid Dentist, he shows concern for patients and even for a columnist trying to conduct an interview.

"Are you afraid of dentists' offices?" he asks as we look for somewhere to sit.

Not as long as I know I don't have to stay there, I explain.

"Well, just so it won't be too starkly realistic, you can sit in that one and I'll sit here," he says as we switch roles and the dentist lounges back in the patient's chair.

And this slightly-built man whose black beard is tinged with grey shows equal concern for hospital patients as he talks rapidly in his unmistakable New York accent (he's lived in Canada for almost 12 years) about their need for an ombudsperson.

Kaellis, a member now for two years of the Victoria General Hospital Board, proposed to the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society (of which he is also a member) that a patient representative or ombudsman be appointed for the hospital. That was back in September but since then the board, most of whose members are in fact elected by the society, narrowly voted to turn down the proposal.

The issue is still not dead, though, as the matter has been referred for further study to the board's quality assurance committee headed by Dr. Michael Ashwood-Smith.

Kaellis will again introduce his proposal at the Society's semi-annual meeting on April 26 when members will get another chance to vote on the ombudsperson question. (Those who are not members or whose membership has lapsed may become eligible to vote by sending $2 dues by March 26 to SVIHS at Victoria General Hospital.

In the meantime, Kaellis is somewhat staggered by the fuss his proposal has caused.

"The Society was overwhelmingly in favor of an ombudsperson but still the board turned it down," he says.

Personnel committee chairman Carol Pickup has said the position would need a salary perhaps as high as $25,000 a year and, in view of a severely constrained budget, the hospital couldn't afford it. The committee also pointed out that newly-appointed provincial ombudsman Karl Friedmann would be responsible for hospital problems.

Neither of these reasons hold water, says Kaellis.

"The average stay for a patient in hospital is one week," he points out. "Do you think a patient fed up with the care is going to take the matter up with the provincial ombudsman when it might take months to resolve? Of course not! The patients need someone on the spot."

Recently three new positions were created at the hospital, Kaellis says and people were appointed to fill them.

"These positions were created to improve the hospital — which is exactly the idea behind the ombudsperson — and it was a routine matter. So why are they making so much fuss about the relatively small amount of money involved for an ombudsperson?"

Kaellis says he knows the answer but won't accept it.

"The administration is frightened of the idea and is marshalling its troops against it, he says. "No one has come out and said it's not a good idea, just that we can't aford it and we don't need it. It's just those 500 or so other hospitals that need one."

Part of the problem, of course, is that old fear of the unknown, of the new. For out of the more than 500 hospitals in North America already having ombudspersons, only around 10 are in Canada and all of those are in the east. So VGH would be the first in the west.

Vancouver General, biggest hospital in Canada, still doesn't have an ombudsman representing patients.

"If they had had one, think of the trouble that might have been avoided last summer," Kaellis says.

"I'm not suggesting we have those kind of problems here because we don't," he says. "But we don't have to get that bad either before we start to improve."

What sort of recommendations though would a hospital administration be afraid that an ombudsman might make to the board? Kaellis grins and quotes from an old movie when a commander discovers a curvacious Greta Garbo hiding in the man's uniform: "Life is gloriously full of the unexpected."

"It's just that hospitals develop a whole feeling of passivity for patients by doing everything for them," he says. "This has to change. Patients have to become more involved in their treatment — and this is just one small way of aiming in that direction."

2,4-D Okayed By Aldermen

Use of the controversial weed killer 2,4-D by city crews was approved Tuesday by Victoria city council's parks committee.

The committee gave the nod to 2,4-D — and 11 other chemicals — after parks administrator Cliff Bate said his work would be handicapped without the spray.

"If you deny us this management aid then you're going to be faced with considerable costs," said Bate in presenting his spraying program for 1979.

"All the experience we have in 30 years would indicate that 2,4-D is an extremely safe herbicide to use."

Committee chairman John Hayes said the city uses only one per cent of the 2,4-D that's sprayed on city gardens and lawns every year.

Stolen Coin Alert

Coin dealers in Greater Victoria have been advised to be on the lookout for about $2,200 worth of gold and silver coins stolen from an Oak Bay home.

A police spokesman said today the thieves were highly selective.

They took seven Canadian $100 gold coins, a Canadian gold sovereign, a South African Krugerrand and numerous Canadian and U.S. silver dollars.

Police refused to identify the owner and would only say the house is in the Foul Bay-Crescent Road area.

Also taken were a camera, four lenses, a tripod, a pair of binoculars, a portable cassette recorder and a calculator, with a total value of about $2,100.

Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

Closure of Mall Termed Stupid By Merchants

Closing Government Street to traffic is either dumb or premature, merchants said today.

Eaton's manager Reginald Hind, past president of both the Downtown Business Association and the Downtown Victoria Association, said he is totally opposed to any closure.

It is "a stupid idea," he said, because the drive up Government is a prime attraction for visitors. Pedestrians have wide sidewalks to use and there was no problem last summer, despite the crowds.

Hind was reacting to a proposal, to be voted on by city council's traffic subcommittee on March 21, to close Government certain hours from May 21 to Sept. 3. The mall would be closed from noon to 4 p.m. and again from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Concerts and other events would be presented on the street during those hours.

Merchants interviewed by the Times expressed concern on the following points:

— Closure would interfere with the free bus route in the downtown core, forcing it along Wharf where there are few stores.

— Concerts would create noise, litter and loitering.

— Cars would continue to use crossing streets and there would be a safety hazard because people would be walking along the street.

— Concerts are more appropriate for the Inner Harbor area or Beacon Hill Park than at the doorway of stores.

— And finally, the merchants should have been consulted long before council considered putting the matter to a vote.

Doug Lewis, president of the Downtown Victoria Association, said he was cool to the idea but the decision should come from the merchants.

Joan Bomford, vice-president of the DVA and a Government merchant, said if the issue has to be decided now she would vote no.

"There has to be much more discussion on this before we come to a decision. There are so many unanswered questions," she said.

Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Mel Cooper said a survey of merchants taken Tuesday showed a concern that the proposal is being rushed.

Man Held In Obed Shooting

Saanich police refused to release details other than that shots were fired and a revolver seized.

Police were called to a house after receiving a report of a threat being made.

Mrs. John Frederick, a nearby resident, said she heard a shot shortly before 11 p.m. About 10 minutes later police arrived.

She said she saw officers struggling with a man on the porch of a house. During the struggle another shot was discharged.

Charges are expected to be laid.

The Great Giveaway to Start Thursday

Financial Houses Set for Free Share Crush

Credit unions, banks and other financial institutions are gearing up for Thursday — the first day application can be made for the controversial, free B.C. Resources Investment Corp. shares.

Financial institutions receive $5 per applicant for filling out the form and distributing the certificates.

(See also page 52).

Opposition politicians have attacked the share giveaway as a political gimmick that could cost B.C. taxpayers an estimated $20 million in distribution and other costs.

They claim a "personal" message from Premier Bill Bennett at the top of each application form is proof that the share scheme is a Socred political ploy.

One credit union, Westcoast Savings, will set up booths in shopping malls, move into schools, run its own advertisements in the media and undertake a bulk mailing program to encourage Victoria area residents to apply for the shares.

A spokesperson for the securities division of the Bank of Montreal said she hopes it is clear to everyone that people have until June 15 to apply.

She said if everyone thinks they have to come in on Thursday, there will be havoc in the bank's branches.

Mrs. Sherrill Mitchell of Canada Permanent Trust said it is impossible to anticipate how fierce the first week's rush will be, but all the company's part time staff will be put on full-time basis for the first few days.

None of the representative agree with earlier criticism expressed by some bankers that putting the onus on the bank to prove eligibility was unfair.

The application form and required identification are clear, the spokesman said.

The BRIC portfolio is essentially resource-oriented, and includes Canadian Cellulose, Kootenay Forest Product, Plateau Mills, shares in Westcoast Transmission Co. and a gas licence on 2.3 acres of Crown land.

Eligible British Columbians can each buy up to 5,000 additional shares at $6 per share.

Applicants for shares must be 16 years or older, a Canadian citizem or one who has qualified or applied for citizenship, and a resident for the last 12 months.

Parents or legal guardians may apply for free shares on behalf of children.

The shares will be distributed on B.C. Day — Aug. 6. There is no tax payable on the free shares.

However, if an individual sells his shares, he or she may have to pay capital gains tax if the shares rise in value.

If dividends are paid in future, the holder will also be subject to taxation.

Great Beginning to Many Meals

cooking with kay

By KAY SPICER

For years cooks have debated about the proper way to cook rice — in lots of water or a little, covered or uncovered, stirred or unstirred.

However, they agree economical, versatile rice can be relied on as the base for many good meals. For half the world's population it's the chief source of food.

Rice is nutritious and easily digested. When only the husks are removed in milling, whole or brown rice is produced. Eighty per cent of it is nutrients, about eight per cent protein and 79 per cent carbohydrates. Brown rice provides vitamins of the B-complex, thiamine, niacin and riboflavin, iron and calcium. Further milling produces white rice. It also reduces its food value so people who rely on rice as the mainstay of their diet always eat brown rice.

Two varieties are popular in Canadian kitchens — short- and long-grain white rice. Actually, most rice is short unless the package states otherwise. Long-grain rice cooks more quickly and is drier and fluffier than short-grain rice. Brown rice has a nut-like flavor and requires a comparatively longer cooking time. Precooked rice is long-grain rice that has been cooked, rinsed and dried, and requires a short cooking period to moisten it and heat it through.

I've never had many problems cooking rice. For some reason I prefer long-grain rice. My family is also used to it so I have it on hand all the time. It's a staple for casserole creations. My method for its basic preparation works. Here it is:

Add 1 teaspoon salt to 2½ cups water in a heavy-bottomed saucepan which has a tight-fitting lid. For softer rice use 3 cups water. Bring water to the rapid boil. Sprinkle in 1 cup rice. Cover tightly, then reduce heat.

Cook over low heat for 18 to 20 minutes until all water is absorbed. I try not to lift the cover during this cooking period but check, if you like, to make sure you have the right saucepan. In a thin-bottomed one the rice may stick to the bottom and even scorch a little. Leaving the lid on allows the rice to steam and prevents sticking.

Fluff cooked rice with a fork after it has cooked. Rice, cooked this way, will keep in the refrigerator. It reheats easily, stir-fried in a lightly buttered pan or steamed in a covered saucepan with a few tablespoons of water over low heat.

SLICK TRICKS: For flavor variations use chicken or beef boullion, tomato juice or even apple juice as the cooking liquid for rice.

For Mushroom Rice: Saute 1 cup sliced mushrooms in 2 tablespoons butter for 5 to 6 minutes then stir into 3 cups cooked rice (1 cup uncooked).

For Rice Almondine: Saute ½ cup slivered almonds in 2 tablespoons butter until golden. Stir into 3 cups cooked rice.

HERBED RICE
(Makes 6 servings ½ cup each)

- 1 cup uncooked rice, long-grain or short-grain
- 2½ cups water (or as package directs)
- 2 cubes chicken bouillon or 2 teaspoons chicken broth mix
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon garlic salt (optional)
- ½ teaspoon rosemary
- ½ teaspoon marjoram
- ½ teaspoon thyme

Measure ingredients into a medium-size saucepan. Heat to boiling point. Stir with a fork. Cover and cook over very low heat until rice is tender and liquid absorbed — about 15 minutes or as package indicates. Serve hot as a side dish or as a base for creamed dishes such as chicken a la king.

CORNED BEEF BALLS IN RICE RING
Makes 6 servings

- 1 (12 ounce) can corned beef (unchilled)
- ½ cup fine cornflakes or bread crumbs
- 1 egg, beaten
- 2 tablespoons chopped onion
- ½ teaspoon chili powder
- Pinch garlic salt
- Freshly ground pepper
- Pinch nutmeg

Rice Ring

- 4 cups hot cooked rice (1⅓ cups uncooked)
- 1 tablespoon dried parsley flakes
- Pinch saffron (optional)
- 1 can (14 ounce) peas, drained
- 1 can (10 ounce) condensed Cheddar Cheese soup
- 2 tablespoons milk
- 1 teaspoon bottled horseradish

Prepare beef balls by first flaking the corned beef with a fork. Mix it with crumbs, egg, onion and seasonings. Shape into about 24 small balls. Arrange on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake in 375 degree F. oven about 12 minutes or until lightly browned.

Lightly grease 4-cup ring mold. Combine cooked rice with parsley, saffron and peas and press it firmly into prepared mold. Cover and keep warm in a pan of hot water or a slow oven. Heat soup with milk and horseradish in a saucepan. Unmold rice on serving platter. Fill hole in centre with meat balls and ladle cheese sauce over all.

CHEESE AND RICE SCALLOP
Makes 6 servings

- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 1 medium onion, finely chopped
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon pepper
- ½ teaspoon sweet basil
- 2 cups milk
- 4 cups cooked rice, white or brown
- 4 hard cooked eggs, shelled and sliced
- 4 medium tomatoes, sliced
- 2 cups shredded Cheddar, Edam or Gouda cheese
- Buttered bread crumbs or crushed potato chips

Melt butter in saucepan; blend in flour. Stir in onion and seasonings. Cook, stirring constantly until sauce thickens. Layer rice, egg slices, tomato slices, shredded cheese and sauce in a buttered 2-quart casserole.

Layer half the rice, half the egg slices, half the tomatoes and half the shredded cheese in a buttered 2-quart casserole. Pour over half the sauce. Repeat layering ending with sauce. Sprinkle with bread crumbs. Bake in 325 degree F. oven 35 minutes or until hot and bubbly.
